EX-EMPEROR CARL DIES IN EXILE

The Big Coal Mine Strike Is On

WALKOUT 100 PER CENT EFFECTIVE,
SAYS PRESIDENT LEWIS—DECLARES
THOUSANDS OF NON-UNION MEN JOIN

Fifteen Hundred Mines In Open Shop Fields Producing, Which Will Considerably Augment The Enormous Stock Of Coal On Hand And Held In Reserve For Strike Duration.

OPERATORS ISSUE NO STATEMENTS

Indianapolis, Indiana, April 1.—The coal walk-out, starting last night, is 100 per cent effective, union officials at headquarters here declared today. 6,000 mines were closed and nearly 600,000 miners were idle. "Every one of the half million United Mine Workers responded," President John L. Lewis said, "except the engineers, the firemen and pumpers, who will prevent flooding of the mines. Thousands of non-union workers were reported to have joined the strike. We have tried to bring the mine owners into wage conferences and now we are going to fight," Lewis declared.

1,500 mines in the open shop fields were hurrying coal above the ground to augment the nation's 65,000,000 tons reserve. This surplus and the non-union production will enable the country to endure a strike of at least six weeks without feeling the pinch of the fuel shortage.

President Lewis has conferred secretly with Secretary-Treasurer William Greene, trying to devise some means to move eastern operators from their position to wage negotiations. They also discussed the attitude of the Federal and State governments.

Pittsburgh, Pa., April 1.—"The fight for the life of organized labor," so characterized by officials of the United Mine Workers, started today. 60,000 workers walked out in the district. Union heads estimated one-fourth of these were non-union men. Today is an official holiday in mining circles. It is the anniversary of the miners' eight hour day. Therefore, it was impossible to estimate the full extent of the strike. Half of the 60,000 miners in Western Pennsylvania have been idle for many months because of lack of work and it is probable that 30,000 of these have merely been transferred from the idle class to the walk-out group. One-third of the miners in this district are unorganized.

Columbus, Ohio, April 1.—Ohio's mines were closed today as 50,000 union workers joined the nation-wide coal strike.

Plymouth, Pa., April 1.—Miners employed here and in this vicinity were idle today, having answered the strike call unanimously. Seven mines are closed and 6,000 men out.

Hazleton, Pa., April 1.—The anthracite mines of the Hazleton district were completely shut down today and 12,000 miners are idle.

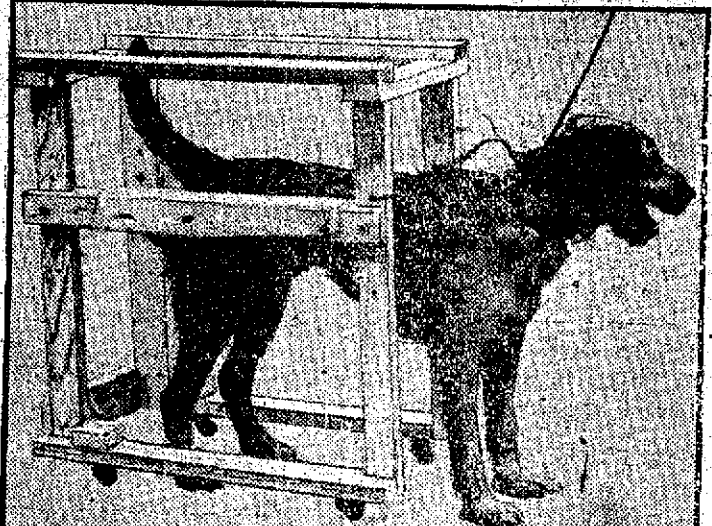

Lansford, Pa., April 1.—The entire fifteen mines of the Lehigh Coal Company are closed today. 9,000 men are idle.

DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE FOR STATE SENATOR

William Betts, local businessman, has finally consented to be a candidate for State Senator from the 34th District. His nomination papers were put in circulation by Centre County friends today.

Little Hope For Settlement At The Genoa Conference

Continental Observers Say It Will Be Only A Fiasco, Like Cannes

BY HENRY WOOD

(United Press Staff Correspondent)
Rome, April 1st (United Press).—With the date of the Genoa Conference definitely fixed for April 10, careful European observers are confidently predicting for it the biggest fiasco that has yet occurred.

Following the complete fizzling out of the last two meetings of the Supreme Council at Paris and at Cannes it is predicted that the Genoa meeting will give the final knockout to all efforts to straighten out the present European situation by means of public international conference.

After that Europe will go back to the old time pre-war method of handling its affairs by the regular diplomatic route. At least, all big questions will be settled that way it is believed.

The pessimistic predictions of European observers are based upon the following reasons:

There has never yet been an international conference summed wherein there was so little harmony in advance amongst the powers that were to participate in it.

There has never been an international conference wherein the conflicting and individual interests of the states participating were so great and their interests in the ostensible purposes for which the conference was called so little.

European thinkers are inclined to think that only the first step has been taken toward internationalism, that the toddling period will last over at least fifty years and that probably a century will be necessary before this international baby can get around without bumping its nose.

The death wailers of the Genoa conference sum up the real attitude of the leading powers toward the meeting as follows:

Italy is really desirous of having the conference for two reasons. It will greatly help her prestige and tend to establish her position as one of the big European powers to have this conference held in Italy and under Italian auspices; it will help Italy immensely in her efforts to open up commercial relations with Russia if she can take the Bolsheviks under her wing at Genoa.

As to France, her real attitude toward the conference is declared to be negative. She never was keen for it, but for the sake of public opinion she could not turn down Lloyd George's play at Cannes for saving Europe via the Genoa route.

England's (or rather Lloyd George's) fundamental reason for calling the conference was merely to permit of an economic reconstruction of Europe that would permit of new England markets, a resumption of English trade and industry and the continued success of the Lloyd George ministry.

Russia has got everything to be gained by the conference and nothing to lose—even whether the original ends for which it was called succeed or not. It is merely propaganda. Even if Trotsky, et al, fail to find at Genoa the capital and food supplies which they ostensibly demand, they will have at last taken contact with the European powers.

The United States will not be a party to the conference. If its unofficial observers don't wear spiked armor they are likely to get some awful cracks on the head and other portions of the anatomy in the general mix-up which is declared to be inevitable.

Bulgaria is out for a flat revision of the treaty.

The little Entente has fixed up a program all its own, which will probably have French support in return for Little Entente support of French interests.

Germany's interests and demands at the conference such as the easing up on reparations, the finding of foreign capital, the development of her industry and commerce will clash with France at every point.

Still, continental observers believe it should be some drawing card as a free for all fight.

Reedsville Boys Pay Fine For Destruction Of School Property

Six Reedsville boys got on a destructive rampage last Sunday afternoon and tore off and literally destroyed the cellar doors at the Second Ward School building. Trust Officer Reese ferreted out the crime and on behalf of the School Board had the six lads before Squire Chorpennin yesterday afternoon. After hearing the testimony concerning the outrage the Squire decided that if the boys paid for the damage done and the costs in the case he would suspend further sentence. This was done at a total cost of a little more than $21, after which the parents of the lads started home intent on holding close communion with each one in the sanctity of the wood shed with a barrel stave at hand.

Big Men Of Pittsburgh Join In A Testimonial Dinner To John Short

The Pittsburgh Post of Wednesday morning last contained the following reference to our fellow townsman, John F. Short, who is succeeded today as U. S. Marshal for the Western District of Pennsylvania by James M. McGregor of Indiana:—

One of the most remarkable tributes ever paid to a departing Federal official in Western Pennsylvania was that given to United States Marshal John F. Short last night in the William Penn Hotel, when public officials and newspaper men joined in expressing their regret at his departure in a dinner and the presentation of a lovecup, dedicated to the retiring marshal as "an advisor, companion, and friend" by the frequenters of the "Amen Corner" in the William Penn.

William J. Brennan was toastmaster and practically everyone present was called upon to give some expression of the sentiment of the community at the retirement of Marshal Short, April 1st. At the conclusion of the dinner the lovecup was presented.

Among the speakers were Congressman John M. Morin, Mayor W. A. McGee, John F. O'Toole, Joseph N. Mackrell, David Lawrence, John P. Harris, L. R. Goshorn, Deputy United States Marshal L. M. Bogan and Ira McCloskey, David B. Johns, Edward N. Jones, James B. Sansom, Frank J. Harris, Lawrence McDonald, John Elmore, Joseph J. Joyce, James P. Kirk, Dennis Harris, John R. Ball, E. J. Edwards, Charles McInerney, William Doak and others.

Local Doughboy Wins English Bride--Sam Harris Is Happiest Man In Clearfield--He Says So

It is said there is more or less romance mixed up in the life of every man and maid upon God's footstool, and while we always believed more or less in that deduction, we were of the opinion that there was "exception to all rules."

That being so we also thought that if there was one man of our acquaintance who might be considered as an exception and utterly devoid of romanticism, especially where the fair sex was concerned, that fellow was our friend Sam Harris of the Army Store on Third street. But then, you know, you never can tell.

We have noticed for some time past that the genial Sam has been going about for the past month or two with apparently more on his mind than his hat, and while we knew there was something out of kilter about Sam we thought it more likely to be digestive than heart trouble. But you never can tell.

About ten days ago Sam departed quietly from Clearfield for New York and last night returned with a blushing bride upon his arm, a Benedict of no less than four days' standing.

And there is a real world war romance wrapped up in the story leading up to Sam's present state of married bliss.

Along early in 1917 when friend Woodrow sent the vanguard of the American army overseas to assist in the utter annihilation of the German Kaiser and his army, in almost the first consignment of regular army fellows was Sam Harris. Sam and his outfit located at Manchester, England, for a time and the young American doughboy met Miss Fannie Fisher, a comely English girl. The little Britisher was interested in the American man of arms at first sight and the two struck up an acquaintance. That acquaintance became quite intimate during the stay of the American troops in the English city and when they jauntily departed for the front little Miss Fisher's heart went along safe in the keeping of Sam Harris, of Uncle Sam's army.

During the progress of the war, with all its vicissitudes the two lovers never lost track of each other and when ordered back home Sam managed to get a furlough before sailing which allowed him to return to the city of Manchester and spend several days with his sweetheart, and when he finally departed for "God's Country," it was with the promise that as soon as he was able to properly take care of a wife he would despatch the glad tidings and would confidently await the day until she would be again in his arms.

That auspicious time arrived a few weeks ago. A cable message notified the little English girl that all was well and her presence on this side of the Atlantic was all that was needed to fill their cup of bliss to overflowing. Upon receipt of the cable from the anxious American lover, little Miss Fisher, after arranging her trossau after the manner of brides' the world over, set sail in a fast boat for the good old U. S. A. and her warrior hero.

When Sam was apprised of the sailing date he quietly departed for New York and on Monday morning last was the first man in line, (the gang plan) as the steamer docked at the pier. He had not long to wait and soon the blushing little maid who traveled 8000 miles of ocean to meet the man of her choice, was in his arms. A journey to the home of relatives was quickly made and on Tuesday morning a trip to the New York City hall resulted in the ceremony which united Sam Harris, Clearfield, and Fannie Fisher, of Manchester, England, in the sacred bonds of wedlock. After a day or two sightseeing Sam and his bride came home to Clearfield, and are now engaged in receiving the congratulations of their friends.

IT IS TOO MUCH

Goodbye, old March! we're glad you're gone. Howdy do, "April"? We can't say we're struck on you from your start. But here we are, fourteen days away from the opening of the fishing season, with the thermometer ranging around "fifty" every stream running bank full and the mountain roads are so bad, it'll be impossible to get to our favorite trout stream by wagon or auto before well into June. Then the rattlesnakes will be ripe and we'll be afraid to go. Now wouldn't that have just suited your boots? Thank goodness the regular Thanksgiving day is so far in the distance. With the coal strike added to all the rest, what has a poor devil to be thankful for now? What? That's what?

Third Ward People Hear Mr. Robinson On Community Work

A meeting of about twenty-five representative men and women of the Third Ward was held in the Recreation Rooms of the Clearfield Textile Works last evening to consider the formation of a Neighborhood Community Association in that ward.

After a few games had been enjoyed, Mr. L. J. Boyce called the meeting to order, and explained the purpose for which it had been called. Mr. W. G. Robinson, who is here representing the national Community Service in the organization of the Clearfield work, explained the field of that organization, and the program of work that had been decided upon by the directors of Clearfield Community Service. He showed how in the development of that program the united effort of the citizens of the various wards was necessary. Mr. G. E. Zerfass enlarged upon the need of the summer play grounds, and in the discussion which followed Mr. Harry Shaw, Paul T. Flaharty, C. G. Johnston and Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Haney were among those who expressed their approval of a plan to further the work in the Third Ward. The Chairman was authorized to appoint committees to call a larger public meeting in the near future and recommend a plan of action.

REV. AND MRS. DURSTINE GIVEN A FINE FAREWELL GIFT

Rev. and Mrs. Durstine have left for their new home in Williamsport. While in Clearfield they made many friends, and did fine work at the Eleventh Street M. E. Church. Last Sunday morning, March 26, a very impressive ceremony was witnessed by a full house when Roy I. Fulton in behalf of the congregation, presented Mrs. Durstine with a gold wrist watch and Mr. Durstine with a leather bill fold containing five new five dollar bills, along with the good wishes and prayers for every possible success in their new home.

GETTING HIS RACING STABLES IN SHAPE

Ex-Sheriff James Mahaffey is moving his stable of seven fast trotters and pacers over to the Clearfield Driving Park where he expects to have them put in shape and condition for the coming fall racing campaign.

The Sheriff's string will be in the hands of Al Francis, a trainer late of the H. H. Stokes grand circuit stables. Francis has as his assistance another "big ring" artist in the person of Tom Addison, and between them they expect to have the Sheriff's colors in the front rank all through the fall schedule.

What is a Picture Frame?
Picture frames are frequently too ornate. The simpler they are the less they attract attention from the picture itself. They should become a part of the picture and not a separate picture in themselves. Color, however, may be used to advantage and any simple wooden frame may be painted in oil paint to match some tone of the picture. Ordinarily this is better than to have the frame harmonize with the woodwork of the room.

WHAT ABOUT YOUR FAMILY?

In case you should be suddenly snatched from the position of protector or bread winner for your family, what about them? Have you made ample provision for their future? The Progress joins in welcoming the three new Methodist pastors to the city of Clearfield. They will find a warm reception from the people of this city, in which there is no denominational quarrel, but only that keen and healthy rivalry which grows out of progressive people putting their talents to work. The three new men come here very highly recommended as churchmen, citizens and moulders of public opinion, and just as important, it is said that they possess that quality so much needed in a community such as ours, where everybody is everybody else's neighbor, of working with and for others. A spirit of co-operation between the churchmen of a city is the most wonderful power for spiritual and civic advancement that can be harnessed. Broad-gauged ministers recognize this and work shoulder to shoulder, forgetting the minor dogmas and articles of faith, which are only a stumbling block to Christian work as it affects a community. We image no one thing could hearten Satan in his realms so much as one preacher finding fault with another or his flock. Onward Christian Soldiers.

Both the miners and the operators of this district are the victims of a squeeze resulting from the refusal of the Central Competitive District to confer with the union officials on a wage scale. The public little understands the many technicalities in the way of a settlement for District No. 2.

All wage agreements in the soft coal fields have heretofore been subject to the wage agreement made in the Central Competitive Field and agreements in no other field could be made, until the Central agreement was available as a basis. Now the Central Field operators refuse to talk agreement, thus tying up the whole industry. The operators of District No. 2 have twice signified their willingness to go into a wage conference but Mr. Brophy is prevented from doing so by this precedent about the Central Field.

This is not a desirable condition and a way must be found to prevent such occurrences in the future. There are very few operators who really desire to break up the union; there are less who hold to any such foolish hopes. No small number of them would deal separately with district officers, or even with local officers, to get their mines in operation, and particularly to be rid of the nuisances of the strike. With this understanding of the situation as District No. 2 is concerned, there is no occasion for any troubles originating in this field as the Central field is the one standing against a joint conference.

Most of us today can sympathize with the old pagan, Pilate, who asked, "What is truth?"

Perhaps there were no professional propagandists in Pilate's time, as there are today, but he had heard many conflicting statements as to a matter that interested him and he was sorely perplexed.

Professional propagandists in recent years have befuddled the public as to a good many things of more or less vital concern. Every newspaper office is flooded with literature, both pro and con, on a variety of subjects.

Conflicting interests, contending forces, are at work in all countries, and each side gives out its own version of affairs. The average man does not know which is true, and perhaps he has not been given the truth at all.

Is it any wonder that, as he finishes reading the morning or evening paper, he asks, like Pilate of old, "What is truth?"

Nobody need be fearful lest the whisker fashion, started in Sacramento, sweep the United States. Why Chevrolet Leads In Sales

Chevrolet New Superior Model is a completely modern, fully equipped car, built to deliver all the real service you can get from any automobile, at the lowest price for which you can get it.

In every line people pay different prices for the same thing, or what is essentially the same thing.

You can hear an opera for from $1.00 to $50.00.

You can buy a square meal at from 50c to $25.00.

You can take a ride for from 1/2c a mile to $2 00 a mile.

In this year of common sense, 1922, people are weighing values. They realize how much they have been spending for show, for vanity, and for non-essentials; and now they are making each dollar WORK.

That is why Chevrolet is first in sales of standard fully equipped cars.

DRINK MORE MILK AND DRINK IT OFTEN

Milk has the most nutritive qualities of any food that you might take. There are the "vitamines" that you hear so much about these days, there are heat "calories," there are minerals and acids that make a combination that will build up any system to a greater point of efficiency than any one single food might do.

Again, when there is such milk as ours at your command, why should you or your kiddies be under-nourished? It's much better for the kiddies than candy or any of the other kindred sweets.

Drink milk, drink more milk and lastly—drink it often.

NOTICE TO SPORTSMEN

DOG OWNERS
The Act of Assn' May 5th, 1921, provides that all dogs must be kept under restraint, and not permitted to roam the woods chasing and destroying game. Mar. 1, closes the legal training season for dogs, all dogs roaming the woods and chasing game since that date is a violation of the law, which provides a penalty of $10. per day for each and every day your dog chases game and additional penalties for each game bird or animal killed by such dogs.

This law is being enforced. Many have already lost valuable dogs and paid penalties for violation of the provisions of this Act. Help us to better game conditions in your territory by seeing to it that all dogs are kept out of the woods, between March 1st and September 1st. This is the season when all game birds or animals breed or nest. Just a few stray dogs will kill more game at this particular time than a great number of sportsmen will kill during the open season.

"Help us," and by so doing improve your own sport.

LESSON FOR APRIL 2

ASA RELIES ON GOD

LESSON TEXT—11 Chronicles 14:1-12.
GOLDEN TEXT—Help us, O Lord our God, for we rest on Thee.—11 Chron. 14:11.
REFERENCE MATERIAL—11 Chron. 14:13-16, Isa. 41:10-13.
PRIMARY TOPIC—A King Who Trusted God.
JUNIOR TOPIC—God Helping Asa.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A Ruler Who Relied on God.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Source of Personal and National Power.

1. Asa's Reformation (vv. 1-5). Asa was the grandson of Rehoboam. Both his grandfather and father favored idolatry, but in spite of this record of his ancestors, Asa had a will of his own, and though young when he came to the throne, inaugurated a campaign of reform which brought great good. He not only had the handicap of the idolatry and immorality fostered by the two former kings, but he had to contend against the influence of his mother who had encouraged immoral worship (1 Kings 15:13). In order to carry out his reformatory measures he had to wrest authority from her by deposing her. Asa did that which was good and right in the eyes of the Lord (v. 2).

1. Cleared the land of idolatrous emblems and images (v. 3, 5). (1) Strange altars. These were the altars devoted to other gods. (2) High places. These were places where unlawful sacrifices were offered. (3) Broke down the images. These were upright stones connected with idolatrous worship. (4) Cut down the groves. These were trees or poles connected with tree worship. He had all these relics of idolatry destroyed in Jerusalem and other cities throughout his kingdom.

2. Commanded Judah to seek the Lord (v. 4). He knew that if the reformation was to be effective it must be by the positive seeking after and worshiping of God, accompanied by obedience to His commandments. The reformatory work would be little unless followed by communion.

11. Asa's Defensive Preparations (vv. 6-5). 1. Built fortified cities (v. 6). The cities are not named, but the meaning doubtless, is that it was a general system of defense which involved the cities at strategic points.

2. He erected walls about the cities (v. 7). These were usually of stone. Upon the walls were observation towers from which the position and movements of the enemy could be seen, and from which defensive warfare could be waged.

3. Made gates and barred them (v. 7). The reason he assigned for these defensive preparations was that they had sought the Lord God. Those who really trust God will make every effort to provide defense.

4. Had an army of spearmen (v. 8). These spearmen were also protected with large shields. The army was made up of 480,000 brave men. They were prepared to wage an offensive as well as a defensive war.

111. Asa's Victory Over Zerah, the Ethiopian (vv. 9-12).

1. Asa set the battle in array (v. 10). He went out to meet the enemy. He first made a disposition of his means of defense. This was wisdom on his part. Intelligent faith moves the possessor to do first that which is within his power.

2. Asa's prayer (vv. 11, 12). He cried unto the Lord. He sought the source of national power. In this prayer note (1) his conscious helplessness. As he faced the Egyptian army two to one against him, he was clearly conscious of his impotence. The first requisite in obtaining help from God is conscious weakness. The Christian conquers not by self-reliance, but by self-distrust and faith in God. (2) Appeals to God for help. He knew that though they were helpless before the mighty enemy, with God's help they could win the victory. One man with God is a majority. (3) Reposes faith in God. The word "rest" means to lean upon—to cast the entire weight upon. In the measure that we realize our need of support will we lean hard upon God. (4) Advanced courageously. He went forth depending upon God to fight for him. Real faith does not wait until it sees its way clear, but goes forth expecting God to clear the way. (5) Trusting himself upon God's arms. "O Lord, thou art our God." His cause was God's cause. If God has taken us for His people, and if we have taken Him for our God, no enemy can prevail against us. May we experimentally say, "Thou art my God," and hear Him say, "I am thy God."

3. The Egyptians smitten (v. 12). The enemy fled before Israel and could not recover themselves.

Love, Faith and Hope. A little love from day to day, and strength enough to preach it; a glimpse of heaven along the way. And faith and hope to reach it.

Console Thyself. If thou suffer injustice, console thyself, the true unhappiness is in doing it.—Democritus.

Mistake Gold for Good. Misers mistake gold for good, whereas it is only a means of obtaining it.—Rochefoucauld.

Life as I See It. A young fellow starting in life trusts everybody and when he gets old he trusts nobody. Who's to blame?—Louisville Courier-Journal.

REV. JOHN T. BELL

Rev. John T. Bell was the son of a Methodist Preacher, Rev. J. Foster Bell and was born at Woodland July 10, 1876. Two years later the father died leaving this widowed mother with but the one child.

Later in life he entered Lafayette College and completed the course. At this time he married Miss Claudia Kitchen and to this union two girls were born, Emory and Helen.

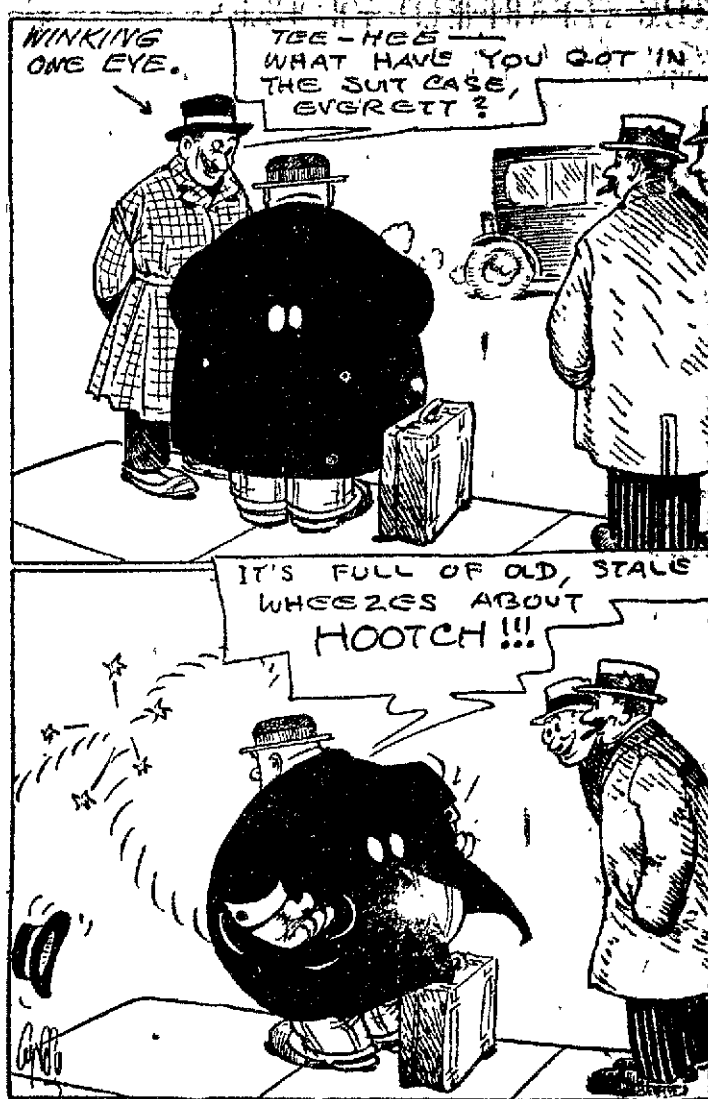

In 1900, with Rev. Armstrong, now pastor of the West Side Church and Rev. B. A. Salter, former pastor of the same church, he entered the ministry of the Central Pennsylvania Conference. He was appointed to Blain 1900-3 and thereafter served the following charges, Belleville and Yeagertown '04-8; Eleventh Street, Clearfield '09-11; Watsonstown '12-16 and Bedford '17-21.

Rev. Bell had never been a robust man, in early life diseased bone of one foot had left him a cripple, and later a neglected empyema of the chest made him a fit subject for tuberculosis. While in Clearfield his health was unusually good, but after moving to Watsonstown, a hemorrhage from the lungs required him to do very little work for a year. He again improved and was removed to Bedford. This was one of his most successful pastorates and during the war he was the most popular speaker in the county for the Liberty Bond drives. Bedford was also on the Lincoln Highway and hundreds of truck trains brought many of the soldiers to that town. He was greatly interested in these young fellows and his enthusiasm led him past his physical capacity. Tuberculosis again became active in his lungs spreading to other parts of his body. Suffering and pain were daily companions. After some months improvement justified his removal to Albuquerque, New Mexico, where he was a patient in the Methodist Deaconess home. This movement proved to be a detriment for the high altitude caused almost daily hemorrhages and he was sent to his mother's home in Milroy in July 1921, later returning to Bedford. Since November he has been very ill and an intense sufferer.

Rev. Bell was a man among men and boys wherever he went. He preached a practical, helpful sermon and lived up to the ideals of his ministry.

EVERETT TRUE

BY CONDO

try. His kindly smile and the simplicity of his message made him beloved by the young people and children, who filled his church Sabbath after Sabbath.

From the time he dedicated himself to God, he never turned back. He possessed a wonderful faith in God which was contagious and throughout his long illness he maintained that faith without wavering. It was a privilege for him to serve others and when sickness prevented his going about he wrote letters of cheer and comfort to those he felt it might help, still striving to live up to a vow that each day he would try to make another's load lighter, comfort the sorrowing and cheer the downhearted. Humility and service to others were the secrets of his ministry. His many friends will feel this loss very kindly.

He is survived by his mother, Mrs. M. E. Bell of Milroy, his wife and two daughters Emory and Helen of Bedford.

A memorial service will be held in the Eleventh Street Church, Sunday Evening at 7:30, conducted by the newly appointed pastor Rev. C. K. Gibson.

CHAPTER XII

The Helpless Wires

When Bobby Kelso shot his news at us we all made a quick break for the dispatcher's office, the boss in the lead. Durgin, the night dispatcher, had been alone on the train desk, and the only other operators on duty were the car record man and the young fellow who acted as a relief on the commercial wire. When we got there, we found that Tarbell had happened to be in the office when Durgin blew up. He was sitting in at the train key, trying to get Crow Gulch, the one intermediate wire station between the two trains that had failed to get their "meet" orders and this was the first I knew that he really was the expert telegraph operator that his payroll description said he was.

Durgin looked like a tortured ghost. He was a thin, dark man with a sort of scattering beard and limp black hair, one of the clearest-headed dispatchers in the bunch, and the very last man, you'd say, to get rattled in a tangle-up. Yet here he was, hunched in a chair at the car record table in the corner, a staring-eyed, pallid-faced wreck, with the sweat standing in big drops on his forehead and his hands shaking as if he had the palsy.

Morris, the relief man, gave us the particulars, such as they were speaking in a hushed voice as if he was afraid of breaking in on Tarbell's steady rattling of the key in the Crow Gulch station call.

"Number Four"—Four was the east-bound "Flyer"—"is five hours off her time," he explained. "As near as I can get it, Durgin was going to make her 'meet' with Number Five at the blind siding at Sand Creek tank. She ought to have had her orders somewhere west of Bauxite Junction, and Five ought to have got hers at Banta. Durgin says he simply forgot that the 'Flyer' was running late, that she was still out and had a 'meet' to make somewhere with Five."

Brief as Morris' explanation was, it was clear enough for anybody who knew the road and the schedules. The regular meeting-point for the two passenger trains was at a point well east of Portal City, instead of west, and so, of course, would not concern the Desert Division crew of either train, since all crews were changed at Portal City. From Banta to Bauxite Junction, some thirty-odd miles, there was only one telegraph station, namely, that at the Crow Gulch lumber camp, seven miles beyond the Timber Mountain "Y" and the gravel pit where the stolen 1016 had been abandoned.

Unluckily, Crow Gulch was only a day station, the day wires being handled by a young man who was half in the pay of the railroad and half in that of the saw-mill company. This young man slept at the mill camp, which was a mile back in the gulch. There was only one chance in a thousand that he would be down at the railroad station at ten o'clock at night, and it was on that thousandth chance that Tarbell was rattling the Crow Gulch call. If Five were making her card time, she was now about half-way between Timber Mountain "Y" and Crow Gulch. And Four, the "Flyer," had just left Bauxite—with no orders whatever. Which meant that the two trains would come together somewhere near Sand Creek.

Mr. Van Britt was as good a wire man as anybody on the line but it was the boss who took things in hand. "There is a long-distance telephone to the Crow Gulch saw-mill; have you tried that?" he barked at Tarbell.

The big young fellow who looked like a cow-boy—and had really been one, they said—glanced up and nodded. "The call's in," he responded. "Central says she can't raise anybody."

For the next three or four minutes the tension was something fierce. The boss and Mr. Van Britt hung over the train desk, and Tarbell kept up his 'insistent clatter at the key. I had an eye on Durgin. He was still hunched up in the record man's chair, and to all appearances had gone stone-blind crazy. Yet I couldn't get rid of the idea that he was listening—listening as if all of his sealed-up senses had turned in to intensify the one of hearing.

Just about the time when the pence had grown so keen that seemed as if it couldn't be but a second longer, Morris, who was sitting in at the office phone, called out sharply. "Long-distance says she's Crow Gulch lumber camp."

Mr. Van Britt jumped to take the phone, and we got one side of the talk—our side—in shot-like sentences.

"That you Bertram? All right, this is Van Britt, at Portal City. Take one of the mules and ride for your horse down the gulch to the station! Get that? Stop Number Five and make her take siding quick. Report over your own wire what you do. Hurry!"

By the time Mr. Van Britt got back to the train desk, the boss had his pencil out and was figuring on Bertram's time margin. It was now ten-twelve, and Five's time at Crow Gulch was ten-eighteen operator had just six minutes in which to get his mule and cover the rough mile down the gulch.

There was nothing to do but wait, and the waiting was savage. Tarbell had a nerve of iron, but I could see his hand shake as it lay on the glass-topped table. The boss was cool enough outwardly but I knew that in his brain there was a heart-breaking picture of those two fast passenger trains rushing together in the night among the hills with no hint of warning to help them save themselves. Mr. Van Britt couldn't keep still. He had his hands jammed in the side pockets of his coat and was pacing back and forth in the little space between the train desk and the counter railing.

At the different tables in the room the sounders were clicking away as if nothing were happening or due to happen and above the spattering din and clatter you could hear the escape-ment of the big standard time clock on the wall, humming out the seconds that might mean life or death to two or three hundred innocent people.

In horrible suspense the six minutes pulled themselves out to an eternity for that little bunch of us in the dispatcher's office who could do nothing but wait. On the stroke of ten-eighteen, the time when Five was due at Crow Gulch on her schedule, Tarbell turned his relay to catch the first faint tapping from the distant day-station. Another sounder was silent. There was hope in the delay, and Morris voiced it.

"He's there, and he's too busy to talk to us," he suggested, in a hushed voice, and Durbrow, the car record man, added: "That's it; it'd take a minute or two to get them in on the siding."

The second minute passed, and then a third, and yet there was no word from Bertram. "Call him," snapped the boss to Tarbell, but before the ex-cow-boy's hand could reach the key, the sounder began to rattle out a string of dots and dashes, ragged Morse it was, but we could all read it only too plainly.

"Too late—mule threw me and I had to crawl and drag a game leg—"

"I Couldn't Get Rid of the Idea That He Was Listening!"

Five passed full speed at ten-nineteen—I couldn't make it."

I saw the boss' hands shut up as though the finger nails would cut into the palms.

"That ends it," he said, with a sort of swearing groan in his voice, and then to Tarbell: "You may as well call Kirgan and tell him to order out the wrecking train. Then have Perkins make up a relief train while you're calling the doctors. Van Britt, you go and notify the hospital over your own office wire. Have my private car put into the relief, and see to it that it has all the necessary supplies. And you'd better notify the undertakers, too."

Great Jowish! but it was horrible—for us to be hustling around and making arrangements for the funeral while the people who were to be gathered up and buried were still swinging along live and well, half of them in the crookings among the Timber Mountain foot-hills and the other half somewhere in the desert stretches below Sand Creek!

Tarbell had sent Durbrow to the phone to call Kirgan, and Mr. Van Britt was turning away to go to his own office, when the chair in the corner by the car-record table fell over backwards with a crash and Durgin came staggering across the room. He was staring straight ahead of him as if he had gone blind, and the sweat was running down his face to lose itself in the straggling beard.

When he spoke his voice seemed to come from away off somewhere, and he was still staring at the blank wall beyond the counter-railing.

"Did I—did I hear somebody say you're sending for the undertakers?" he choked with a dry rattle in his throat, and then without waiting for an answer: "While you're at it, you'd better get one for me . . . there's the money to pay him," and he tossed a thick roll of bank bills, wrapped around with a rubber band, over to Tarbell at the train desk.

Naturally, the little grand stand play with the bank roll made a diversion, and that is why the muffled crash of a pistol shot came with a startling shock to everybody. When we turned to look, the mischief was done. Durgin had crumpled down into a misshapen heap on the floor and the sight we saw was enough to make your blood run cold.

You see he had put the muzzle of the pistol into his mouth and—but it is no use. I can't tell about it and the very thought of that thing that had just a minute before been a man lying there on the floor makes me see black and I want to keel over. What he had said about sending for an extra undertaker was right as light. With the top of his head blown off the poor devil didn't need anything more in this world except the burying.

Somewhat his sad mighty truthfully, that even a death in the family doesn't stop the common routine that the things that have to be done will go grinding on just the same whether all of us live or some of us die. Durbrow had jumped from the telephone at the crash of Durgin's shot and for just a second or so we all stood around the dead dispatcher nobody making a move.

Then Mr. Norcross came alive with a jerk, telling Durbrow to get back on his job of calling out the wrecking trains, and the relief train and directing Bobby Kelso to go to another phone and call an undertaker to come and get Durgin's body. Tarbell turned back to the train desk to keep things from getting into a worse tangle than they already were in and to wait for the dreadful news, and the boss stood by him.

This second wait promised to be the worst of all. The collision was due to happen miles from the nearest wire station, the news when we should get it, would probably be carried back to Bauxite Junction by the passenger engine which had come out to try to overtake the "Flyer." But even in that case it might be an agonizing hour or more before we could hear anything.

In a little while Durbrow had clicked in his call to Kirgan, and when the undertaker's wagon came to gather up what was left of the dead dispatcher, the car record man was hurriedly writing off his list of doctors, and Mr. Van Britt had gone down to superintend the making up of the relief train. True to his theory, which among other things had down the broad principle that the public had a right to be given all the facts in a railroad disaster, Mr. Norcross was just telling me to call up the Mountaintop office when Tarbell calmly making true reports upon his train sheet, down his pen and scribbled at his key to "back the chattering sounder."

Mr. Van Britt had come upstairs again, and he and the boss were both standing over Tarbell when the C-S break cleared the wire. Instantly there came a quick call "G-S" followed by the signature "T-B" for Bauxite Junction. Tarbell in weaved and then we all heard what Pan had had to say.

Pan's overlook Number Four three miles west of Sand Creek and his brought her back here. What orders for her?

Somewhat he groaned. Oh third God! and Mr. Van Britt dropped into a chair as if he had been hit by a cannon ball. Only the boss kept his head calling out sharply to Durbrow to get off on the doctors' list and to hurry and stop Kirgan from getting away with the wrecking train.

When it was all over and Tarbell had been given charge of the dispatching while a hurry call was sent out for the night relief man, Durbrow came down and into the train desk, there was a little committee meeting in the general manager's office with the boss in the chair, and Mr. Van Britt sitting in for the other member.

"Of course you've drawn your own conclusions. Upon?" the boss began when he had asked me to shut the door.

"I guess so," was the first rejoinder. "I'm afraid it is only too plain that Durgin was hired to do it. What because of the money?"

"I hate it here," said the boss, and he took the blood money bank roll from his pocket and moved the rubber band and "Count it, Durbrow, he ordered passing it to me."

I ran through the bunch. It was in twenties and fifties and there was an even thousand dollars.

"That is the price of a man's life," said Mr. Van Britt solemnly and then Mr. Norcross said "Who knows anything about Durgin? Was he a married man?"

Mr. Van Britt shook his head. He had been married but he and his wife didn't live together. He had no relatives here. I knew him in the southwest two years ago. He had domestic trouble of some kind and didn't mix at all much with the other men. But he was a good dispatcher and two months ago, when we had an opening here, I sent for him.

ODDS AND ENDS AND THINGS

By J. D. C.

There's a hole in the dragnet of Government economy spread around official Washington by Budget Director Dawes and other "watch dogs of the Treasury."

An indication of this came to light when there was delivered to Commander Ralston Holmes, U. S. N., "skipper" of the Presidential yacht Mayflower, a $50,000 speed boat, with mahogany trimmings and rich upholstery.

The rashish craft will occupy a permanent berth on the forward deck of the Mayflower, and will be used by President Harding to carry him ashore when cruising in the Presidential yacht.

Decorated with the Executive seal and the four-starred Presidential ensign, the new speed craft is expected to make a fine showing as a dispatch boat for the President when he starts his summer cruises.

Who wants to be a centenarian? The objective is open to those who seek by Dr. A. Laphorn Smith, an English physician.

He has written a book on "How to Be Useful and Happy from Sixty to Ninety," and in his preface adds the wish that his advice may enable his readers to reach a hundred.

Here are some of his precepts: If you want to keep young keep in with young folks.

Cut down the amount of food, three meals are better than four and two much better than three.

Increase the amount of water. Neither a city nor a citizen can run a drainage system without a water works.

Never exceed one ounce of tobacco a week. Never drink alcohol except at meals or before 6 p. m. and always well diluted with water.

If, when you reach sixty, you have a beard three feet long cut it off gradually.

Do not speculate at sixty. You may lose your sleep as well as your money.

If you have a big business, get some young horses to pull the wagon, but don't get off the wagon.

Cancer, pneumonia and influenza are the principal causes of death between sixty and ninety. They are all three contagious. Do not let your friends give them to you.

People from sixty to ninety should be excused from going to funerals. The funeral of your friends is some times followed by your own.

Dr. Leopold's assertion in his letter published in "The collyum" Thursday evening relative to Miller Bros. 101 Ranch being the largest in the world moves his neighbor H. P. Dowler, of West Market street, to remark that his dentist-friend was somewhat mistaken.

Mr. Dowler is quite familiar with the southwest and recently returned home from a business trip to that section in which he also visited the 101 Ranch. Mr. Dowler says the largest ranch in the world is located in Texas, alright, but that it is not Miller Bros. ranch, but that of a Mrs. King. It is located in Southern Texas and makes up in area one hundredth part of the State, being 45 miles wide and 90 miles long, or just twice the size of the State of Rhode Island. This mammoth ranch contains 1,700,000 acres and is more than fourteen times the size of the 101 ranch.

Clearfield happens of tender, age, are enjoying moonlight automobile rides to "moonshine parties" these evenings, according to the stories going the rounds where local "Shifters" congregate. These "Shifters" sounds relate at great length how they are able on occasion to slip a little moonshine into the soda or other innocent drinks served their young girl companions. Parents would do well to keep tab on auto parties these evenings. Tell us who you joy ride with, girls, and we'll tell you what you are.

Susan's Secret.

Susan had been put out to service, and her mistress liked the rosy face of the young girl. One day Susan was sent on an errand to town. She was longer than usual, and her mistress stood in the porch as she came through the field. Susan was happy, and her mistress said: "Why, Susan, what a rosy, happy face you have today! You look as if the dew had kissed you." Susan dropped her eyelids, and murmured: "Indeed, ma'am, but that wasn't his name."

Why "Bootleg" Whisky.

"Bootleg" is a pure Americanism, that grew up among the stills of the mountain country. Bootleg liquor was liquor that was secretly carried in the leg of the moonshiner's boot, because no tax had been paid on it. Usually the man who thus carried it was a native who had distilled it himself, and he became known as a bootlegger and the liquor he carried as bootleg whisky. Nowadays, of course, it is any form of liquor sold in violation of the law.

What Will Your Car Be Worth After It Has Run Fifty Thousand Miles?

A definite way to judge value and compute cost of upkeep and operation. Learn how economical it is to own a Marmon—The Foremost Fine Car

When you buy a motor car think of the day when you will want to sell it. What will it be worth, for instance, after it has run 50,000 miles? It will be only a fraction of what it cost to put it in first-class condition.

If renewing is high, your car's value is less. If renewal is low, your car's value is increased. It is a simple matter of arithmetic.

Figure by the year or by mileage, as you choose. The result is the same. You are really buying transportation. Shall it be good or bad, efficient or disappointing?

The way to judge efficiency is to choose the car that spends the least time in the shop. And that means the one which, due to inherent design and finer materials, can be renewed better, quicker and at lower cost.

That requirement is best met by the Marmon, which has established its position as The Foremost Fine Car, the most dependable, the most economical, the least depreciating of all comparable cars. This is based on records kept of thousands of 1920, 1921 and 1922 Marmons throughout the country—some with mileages of 55,000 and up.

Every fact about the Marmon is at your disposal. We can prove every statement made here, as we have in opportunity.

Whaleskin Valuable.
Whiteskin is so thick that it can be split into several layers, each as stout as ox hide, and it is excellent for making boots, bags, harness, or belting. The usefulness of the whale in this respect is not confined to his outer skin. The stomach furnishes a leather as soft and as strong as the best kid. Another important thing about the whale is that the whole of his skin is good. The skins of cows, horses and other land animals furnish a comparatively small quantity of leather, for only certain portions of the hide are of the right quality.

The other story relates that our First Mother got so "fed up" with her husband's attentions that she prayed God to send him some other distraction, and the heavenly gift of tobacco answered her prayer.—Montreal Family Herald

YOU MUST KEEP OFF THE GRASS

Glen Richey, March 30, 1922
EDITOR PROGRESS:

Dear Sir:—Please give us space in your paper for a little tale about Morgan—not Morgan, the old time freebooter, who used to shake down the "Spiggoty's" down around South America, but our own Bob Morgan, who was haled into Justice Kialzer's Curwensville Court by a grouchy old Pike Township farmer because some fellow drove his automobile over one corner of one of his penny-royal fields, where it would hurry one to raise even an umbrella, although the old fellow has raised lots of L with his neighbors about this field.

The other day the genial Bob was driving to Clearfield via of Hogback. He found the roads simply awful and when he neared the Porter place, saw where some fellow ahead of him had skirted the road and edged along one of Porter's fields for possibly one hundred yards before he got back on to the road. Bob says he heard that old man Porter was rather crusty and decided that as he weighed but eight stone in battle trim and had one flat wheel he had better stick to the road, mud or no mud. He did so, but soon found himself up against it for far with the axles of his car dragging the mud, and unable to proceed. Borrowing a shovel from Mr. Porter and with the assistance of a couple of friends, Bob's knowledge of mining allowed him to get the car out after one hour and a half's labor. During the gyrations or evolution from the mire to the solid ground one wheel touched Porter's sacred soil.

During the time Bob was floundering in the depths of Pike Township, a car belonging to Harry Ogden, a neighbor of Mr. Porter's came along, driven by Ogden's son, and he was forced to enroach upon the field for a few feet in getting by. All difficulties and some time and Bob was finally able to get under way.

But his difficulties were far from ended. The next day he was summoned to appear before Squire Kratzer to answer for trespassing on Porter's hellraising acres. Porter had two offenses chalked up against Bob and none against Ogden and insisted on the Justice soaking Bob $17.50 to be used for "edification" and general advancement of Pike Township school children.

Now a Scotchman don't care a hit more for a dollar than a farmer does for one of his eyes and Bob naturally objected to parting with seventeen of them in a flock and he put up strenuous objection to the operation or attempted operation on his bankroll. The upshot of the matter was that because Porter was unable to prove where Robert had violated the sanctity of his broad acres as he stated Bob finally succeeded in getting off with a loss of $2.50 in cash and yards and yards of his temper. The prosecutor had more respect for Big Harry, his neighbor but he was determined that Little Bob should pay.

We Glen Richey fellows would like to have this appear in your paper as a warning to Lawrence Township motorists to keep off the grass while traveling through Pike Township and will appreciate its appearing.

Yours truly,
GLEN RICHEY MUDLARKS

Not at all a "Bad Idea." Just as tugboats and American Legion posts and suburban streets are named in memory of persons who have been associated with them, so wedding gifts are designated by the name of the giver. When the bride calls to hubby from the kitchen for the "company" silver, she asks for "Aunt Bertha's" soup ladle or "Jack's" tea strainer, or "Mother Jones'" teacup set. And hubby may inquire impatiently for the hand-worked towels "that Auntie sent us." Of course, the system may also be used to flatter some old flame who happens to be calling.

An instance of momentary success in the collection has been noted when the minister published the following goliath in the congregational calendar: "I am 25 cents. I'm too small to buy a quart of oil; I'm too small to buy one-half pound of candy; I'm too small to buy a ticket to a good movie show; I'm even too small to buy a box of undetectable rouge; but most people think I'm 'some money' when I come to church."—The Christian Register.

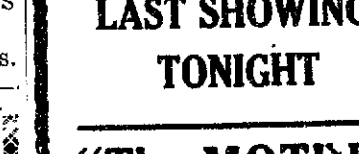

Smallest Visible Things.
Few persons would guess that the smallest things visible to the eye are the stars. Yet stars were no doubt correct in declaring that such is the case. Great as many of the stars are in actual magnitude, their distance is so immense that their angular diameter becomes insensible and they approach the condition of geometrical points. The minute disks that they appear to have are spurious, an effect of irradiation.

Problem in Criticism.
Criticism presents to the creator a problem which is never solved. Criticism is, to the artist, a perpetual presence; or perhaps a ghost which he will not succeed in laying. "Corporations Have No Souls."

This legal maxim was first laid down by Sir Edward Coke in the case of Sutton's hospital. "They (corporations) cannot commit treason nor be outlawed nor excommunicated, for they have no souls." Lord Thurlow subsequently paraphrased this maxim in his own rough way: "You never expected justice from a corporation, did you? They have neither a soul to lose nor a body to kick."

Comfort a Necessary Element.

For real comfort have a small stand at the side of your bed on which you keep a collection of books and magazines. This, with a well arranged light will give you an hour's comfortable reading many a night. Be a little careful in the choice of this stand; you will find that a stand with at least one shelf and a small drawer is very convenient.

WILLIAM DOTS, SR., PASSES AWAY

Clearfield county has lost one of the oldest, best known and most highly esteemed citizens in the death of the venerable William Dotts, Sr., whose illness was recently referred to in our columns, and who passed away at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Orrie Radebach, wife of Prof. J. E. Radebach, supervising principal of the Osceola schools, at Fairview, near Osceola Mills, on Wednesday, March 29th, 1922.

The deceased was born near Philadelphia on August 24th, 1830, making his age 91 years, 7 months and 5 days. He was one of fourteen children, all of whom preceded him to the spirit world and three of whom lived to be over 90 years of age.

Mr. Dotts came to Clearfield county in 1862, locating at Glen Hope, where he resided for many years and followed cabinet making and carpentering. He was united in marriage to Miss Catherine Keagy on February 9, 1865. To this union four children were born. The only one surviving is his daughter, Mrs. J. E. Radebach, with whom he has for some time been making his home and from whom he received his last tender ministrations during the illness that finally resulted in his demise.

Mr. Dotts was a member of the Presbyterian church, and passed away in the triumph of the christian faith. He was a good man, and many in the last day will be able to rise up and call him blessed for kindnesses shown them in his long and useful life.

He was also a charter member of the Glen Hope Lodge, No. 669, I. O. O. F., organized 53 years ago. The funeral will be held this afternoon, with interment at Glen Hope.

Re-Cover Before The Spring Rush

There's going to be a grand rush for this sort of work if the weather keeps like it has for the past few days. Spring housecleaning is going to be uppermost in the minds of the housewives and this housecleaning brings to light furniture that needs to be re-covered and re-upholstered.

Have arrangements made so that you avoid the rush and so that you avoid the disappointing intelligence, "No, your work isn't done yet. It was caught in the rush."

Crafty Siberian natives had substituted these for the walrus ivory which was ordered. The cheaters, however, cheated themselves, for in spite of its great age the substitute was well preserved and the large size of the tusks consequently made them more valuable.

The Big Coal Mine Strike Is On

WALKOUT 100 PER CENT EFFECTIVE,
SAYS PRESIDENT LEWIS—DECLARES
THOUSANDS OF NON-UNION MEN JOIN

Fifteen Hundred Mines In Open Shop Fields Producing, Which Will Considerably Augment The Enormous Stock Of Coal On Hand And Held In Reserve For Strike Duration.

OPERATORS ISSUE NO STATEMENTS

Indianapolis, Indiana, April 1.—The coal walk-out, starting last night, is 100 per cent effective, union officials at headquarters here declared today. 6,000 mines were closed and nearly 600,000 miners were idle. "Every one of the half million United Mine Workers responded," President John L. Lewis said, "except the engineers, the firemen and pumpers, who will prevent flooding of the mines. Thousands of non-union workers were reported to have joined the strike. We have tried to bring the mine owners into wage conferences and now we are going to fight," Lewis declared.

1,500 mines in the open shop fields were hurrying coal above the ground to augment the nation's 65,000,000 tons reserve. This surplus and the non-union production will enable the country to endure a strike of at least six weeks without feeling the pinch of the fuel shortage.

President Lewis has conferred secretly with Secretary-Treasurer William Greene, trying to devise some means to move eastern operators from their position to wage negotiations. They also discussed the attitude of the Federal and State governments.

Pittsburgh, Pa., April 1.—"The fight for the life of organized labor," so characterized by officials of the United Mine Workers, started today. 60,000 workers walked out in the district. Union heads estimated one-fourth of these were non-union men. Today is an official holiday in mining circles. It is the anniversary of the miners' eight hour day. Therefore, it was impossible to estimate the full extent of the strike. Half of the 60,000 miners in Western Pennsylvania have been idle for many months because of lack of work and it is probable that 30,000 of these have merely been transferred from the idle class to the walk-out group. One-third of the miners in this district are unorganized.

Columbus, Ohio, April 1.—Ohio's mines were closed today as 50,000 union workers joined the nation-wide coal strike.

Plymouth, Pa., April 1.—Miners employed here and in this vicinity were idle today, having answered the strike call unanimously. Seven mines are closed and 6,000 men out.

Hazleton, Pa., April 1.—The anthracite mines of the Hazleton district were completely shut down today and 12,000 miners are idle.

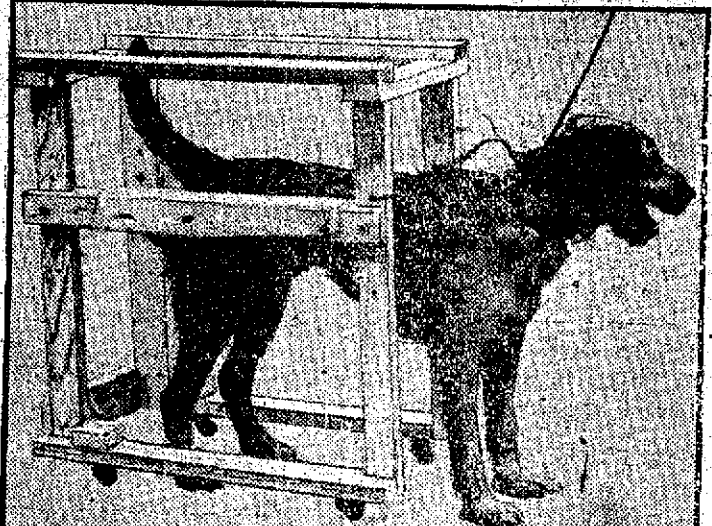

Lansford, Pa., April 1.—The entire fifteen mines of the Lehigh Coal Company are closed today. 9,000 men are idle.

Little Hope For Settlement At The Genoa Conference

Continental Observers Say It Will Be Only A Fiasco, Like Cannes

BY HENRY WOOD

(United Press Staff Correspondent)
Rome, April 1st (United Press).—With the date of the Genoa Conference definitely fixed for April 10, careful European observers are confidently predicting for it the biggest fiasco that has yet occurred.

Following the complete fizzling out of the last two meetings of the Supreme Council at Paris and at Cannes it is predicted that the Genoa meeting will give the final knockout to all efforts to straighten out the present European situation by means of public international conference.

After that Europe will go back to the old time pre-war method of handling its affairs by the regular diplomatic route. At least, all big questions will be settled that way it is believed.

The pessimistic predictions of European observers are based upon the following reasons:

There has never yet been an international conference summed wherein there was so little harmony in advance amongst the powers that were to participate in it.

There has never been an international conference wherein the conflicting and individual interests of the states participating were so great and their interests in the ostensible purposes for which the conference was called so little.

European thinkers are inclined to think that only the first step has been taken toward internationalism, that the toddling period will last over at least fifty years and that probably a century will be necessary before this international baby can get around without bumping its nose.

The death wailers of the Genoa conference sum up the real attitude of the leading powers toward the meeting as follows:

Italy is really desirous of having the conference for two reasons. It will greatly help her prestige and tend to establish her position as one of the big European powers to have this conference held in Italy and under Italian auspices; it will help Italy immensely in her efforts to open up commercial relations with Russia if she can take the Bolsheviks under her wing at Genoa.

As to France, her real attitude toward the conference is declared to be negative. She never was keen for it, but for the sake of public opinion she could not turn down Lloyd George's play at Cannes for saving Europe via the Genoa route.

England's (or rather Lloyd George's) fundamental reason for calling the conference was merely to permit of an economic reconstruction of Europe that would permit of new England markets, a resumption of English trade and industry and the continued success of the Lloyd George ministry.

Russia has got everything to be gained by the conference and nothing to lose—even whether the original ends for which it was called succeed or not. It is merely propaganda. Even if Trotsky, et al, fail to find at Genoa the capital and food supplies which they ostensibly demand, they will have at last taken contact with the European powers.

The United States will not be a party to the conference. If its unofficial observers don't wear spiked armor they are likely to get some awful cracks on the head and other portions of the anatomy in the general mix-up which is declared to be inevitable.

Bulgaria is out for a flat revision of the treaty.

The little Entente has fixed up a program all its own, which will probably have French support in return for Little Entente support of French interests.

Germany's interests and demands at the conference such as the easing up on reparations, the finding of foreign capital, the development of her industry and commerce will clash with France at every point.

Still, continental observers believe it should be some drawing card as a free for all fight.

Reedsville Boys Pay Fine For Destruction Of School Property

Six Reedsville boys got on a destructive rampage last Sunday afternoon and tore off and literally destroyed the cellar doors at the Second Ward School building. Truant Officer Reese ferreted out the crime and on behalf of the School Board had the six lads before Squire Chorpennin yesterday afternoon. After hearing the testimony concerning the outrage the Squire decided that if the boys paid for the damage done and the costs in the case he would suspend further sentence. This was done at a total cost of a little more than $21, after which the parents of the lads started home intent on holding close communion with each one in the sanctity of the wood shed with a barrel stave at hand.

Big Men Of Pittsburgh Join In A Testimonial Dinner To John Short

The Pittsburgh Post of Wednesday morning last contained the following reference to our fellow townsman, John F. Short, who is succeeded today as U. S. Marshal for the Western District of Pennsylvania by James M. McGregor of Indiana:—

One of the most remarkable tributes ever paid to a departing Federal official in Western Pennsylvania was that given to United States Marshal John F. Short last night in the William Penn Hotel, when public officials and newspaper men joined in expressing their regret at his departure in a dinner and the presentation of a lovecup, dedicated to the retiring marshal as "an advisor, companion, and friend" by the frequenters of the "Amen Corner" in the William Penn.

William J. Brennan was toastmaster and practically everyone present was called upon to give some expression of the sentiment of the community at the retirement of Marshal Short, April 1st. At the conclusion of the dinner the lovecup was presented.

Among the speakers were Congressman John M. Morin, Mayor W. A. McGee, John F. O'Toole, Joseph N. Mackrell, David Lawrence, John P. Harris, L. R. Goshorn, Deputy United Marshal L. M. Bogan and Ira McCloskey, David B. Johns, Edward N. Jones, James B. Sansom, Frank J. Harris, Lawrence McDonald, John Elmore, Joseph J. Joyce, James P. Kirk, Dennis Harris, John R. Ball, E. J. Local Doughboy Wins English Bride--Sam Harris Is Happiest Man In Clearfield--He Says So

It is said there is more or less romance mixed up in the life of every man and maid upon God's footstool, and while we always believed more or less in that deduction, we were of the opinion that there was "exception to all rules."

That being so we also thought that if there was one man of our acquaintance who might be considered as an exception and utterly devoid of romanticism, especially where the fair sex was concerned, that fellow was our friend Sam Harris of the Army Store on Third street. But then, you know, you never can tell.

We have noticed for some time past that the genial Sam has been going about for the past month or two with apparently more on his mind than his hat, and while we knew there was something out of kilter about Sam we thought it more likely to be digestive than heart trouble. But you never can tell.

About ten days ago Sam departed quietly from Clearfield for New York and last night returned with a blushing bride upon his arm, a Benedict of no less than four days' standing.

And there is a real world war romance wrapped up in the story leading up to Sam's present state of married bliss.

Along early in 1917 when friend Woodrow sent the vanguard of the American army overseas to assist in the utter annihilation of the German Kaiser and his army, in almost the first consignment of regular army fellows was Sam Harris. Sam and his outfit located at Manchester, England, for a time and the young American doughboy met Miss Fannie Fisher, a comely English girl. The little Britisher was interested in the American man of arms at first sight and the two struck up an acquaintance. That acquaintance became quite intimate during the stay of the American troops in the English city and when they jauntily departed for the front little Miss Fisher's heart went along safe in the keeping of Sam Harris, of Uncle Sam's army.

During the progress of the war, with all its vicissitudes the two lovers never lost track of each other and when ordered back home Sam managed to get a furlough before sailing which allowed him to return to the city of Manchester and spend several days with his sweetheart, and when he finally departed for "God's Country," it was with the promise that as soon as he was able to properly take care of a wife he would despatch the glad tidings and would confidently await the day until she would be again in his arms.

That auspicious time arrived a few weeks ago. A cable message notified the little English girl that all was well and her presence on this side of the Atlantic was all that was needed to fill their cup of bliss to overflowing. Upon receipt of the cable from the anxious American lover, little Miss Fischer, after arranging her trossau after the manner of brides' the world over, set sail in a fast boat for the good old U. S. A. and her warrior hero.

When Sam was apprised of the sailing date he quietly departed for New York and on Monday morning last was the first man in line, (the gang plan) as the steamer docked at the pier. He had not long to wait and soon the blushing little maid who traveled 8000 miles of ocean to meet the man of her choice, was in his arms. A journey to the home of relatives was quickly made and on Tuesday morning a trip to the New York City hall resulted in the ceremony which united Sam Harris, Clearfield, and Fannie Fischer, of Manchester, England, in the sacred bonds of wedlock. After a day or two sightseeing Sam and his bride came home to Clearfield, and are now engaged in receiving the congratulations of their friends.

BOROUGH HEALTH IN EXCELLENT SHAPE DURING PAST WEEK

The measles epidemic seems to be subsiding somewhat hereabouts as the past week shows but 11 new cases reported to Secretary Gault of the Health Board. During the same period there were also reported 2 cases of chicken pox and one of mumps.

There are at present thirty cases of contagious diseases under quarantine in the town as follows:—Measles 19, Chicken Pox 4, Diphtheria 3, scarlet fever 2, Mumps 2. They are located in the different wards as follows:

First Ward.—Measles 4, Diphtheria 1.
Second Ward.—Scarlet Fever 2, Diphtheria 1.
Third Ward.—Measles 12, Chicken Pox 1.
Fourth Ward.—Measles 3, Chicken Pox 3, Mumps 2, Diphtheria 1.

IT IS TOO MUCH
Goodbye, old March! we're glad you're gone. Howdy do, "April"? We can't say we're struck on you from your start. But here we are, fourteen days away from the opening of the fishing season, with the thermometer ranging around "fifty" every stream running bank full and the mountain roads are so bad, it'll be impossible to get to our favorite trout stream by wagon or auto before well into June. Then the rattlesnakes will be ripe and we'll be afraid to go. Now wouldn't that have just suited your boots? Thank goodness the regular Thanksgiving day is so far in the distance. With the coal strike added to all the rest, what has a poor devil to be thankful for now? What? That's what?

After a few games had been enjoyed, Mr. L. J. Boyce called the meeting to order, and explained the purpose for which it had been called. Mr. W. G. Robinson, who is here representing the national Community Service in the organization of the Clearfield work, explained the field of that organization, and the program of work that had been decided upon by the directors of Clearfield Community Service. He showed how in the development of that program the united effort of the citizens of the various wards was necessary. Mr. G. E. Zerfass enlarged upon the need of the summer play grounds, and in the discussion which followed Mr. Harry Shaw, Paul T. Flaharty, C. G. Johnston and Mr. and Mrs. R. M. GETTING HIS RACING STABLES IN SHAPE

Ex-Sheriff James Mahaffey is moving his stable of seven fast trotters and pacers over to the Clearfield Driving Park where he expects to have them put in shape and condition for the coming fall racing campaign.

The Sheriff's string will be in the hands of Al Francis, a trainer late of the H. H. Stokes grand circuit stables. Francis has as his assistance another "big ring" artist in the person of Tom Addison, and between them they expect to have the Sheriff's colors in the front rank all through the fall schedule.

What is a Picture Frame?
Picture frames are frequently too ornate. The simpler they are the less they attract attention from the picture itself. They should become a part of the picture and not a separate picture in themselves. Color, however, may be used to advantage and any simple wooden frame may be painted in oil paint to match some tone of the picture. Ordinarily this is better than to have the frame harmonize with the woodwork of the room.

All Depends.

WHAT ABOUT YOUR FAMILY?

In case you should be suddenly snatched from the position of protector or bread winner for your family, what about them? Have you made ample provision for their future? It does not take very much of an outlay to protect them but it will be a mighty good thing for them, as you will be sure that they will be taken care of in the event that you are taken suddenly from their midst.

The Progress joins in welcoming the three new Methodist pastors to the city of Clearfield. They will find a warm reception from the people of this city, in which there is no denominational quarrel, but only that keen and healthy rivalry which grows out of progressive people putting their talents to work. The three new men come here very highly recommended as churchmen, citizens and moulders of public opinion, and just as important, it is said that they possess that quality so much needed in a community such as ours, where everybody is everybody else's neighbor, of working with and for others. A spirit of co-operation between the churchmen of a city is the most wonderful power for spiritual and civic advancement that can be harnessed. Broad-gauged ministers recognize this and work shoulder to shoulder, forgetting the minor dogmas and articles of faith, which are only a stumbling block to Christian work as it affects a community. We image no one thing could hearten Satan in his realms so much as one preacher finding fault with another or his flock. Onward Christian Soldiers.

Both the miners and the operators of this district are the victims of a squeeze resulting from the refusal of the Central Competitive District to confer with the union officials on a wage scale. The public little understands the many technicalities in the way of a settlement for District No. 2.

All wage agreements in the soft coal fields have heretofore been subject to the wage agreement made in the Central Competitive Field and agreements in no other field could be made, until the Central agreement was available as a basis. Now the Central Field operators refuse to talk agreement, thus tying up the whole industry. The operators of District No. 2 have twice signified their willingness to go into a wage conference but Mr. Brophy is prevented from doing so by this precedent about the Central Field.

This is not a desirable condition and a way must be found to prevent such occurrences in the future. There are very few operators who really desire to break up the union; there are less who hold to any such foolish hopes. No small number of them would deal separately with district officers, or even with local officers, to get their mines in operation, and particularly to be rid of the nuisances of the strike. With this understanding of the situation as District No. 2 is concerned, there is no occasion for any troubles originating in this field as the Central field is the one standing against a joint conference.

Most of us today can sympathize with the old pagan, Pilate, who asked, "What is truth?"

Perhaps there were no professional propagandists in Pilate's time, as there are today, but he had heard many conflicting statements as to a matter that interested him and he was sorely perplexed.

Professional propagandists in recent years have befuddled the public as to a good many things of more or less vital concern. Every newspaper office is flooded with literature, both pro and con, on a variety of subjects.

Conflicting interests, contending forces, are at work in all countries, and each side gives out its own version of affairs. The average man does not know which is true, and perhaps he has not been given the truth at all.

Is it any wonder that, as he finishes reading the morning or evening paper, he asks, like Pilate of old, "What is truth?"

Nobody need be fearful lest the whisker fashion, started in Sacramento, sweep the United States. Sacramento wants to celebrate the days of '49 and must have whiskers, because the forty-niners had little time or desire to shave and their chin foliage grew and grew until it kept the chest warm on cold nights. A forty-nine celebration would be without its kick if its actors appeared with clean shaves, or even with false whiskers, and anyhow, this is a day of realism.

Whiskers must grow, else Sacramento could have no celebration. But on the morning after the event, how the barbers of the California capital will have to work! Think of the mass of hair the street cleaning department will have to cart away! It is true that fads in personal adornment need little to start them, but America doesn't fancy whiskers; they get in the way. She will have but few of them. And that's a good thing.

Why Chevrolet Leads In Sales
 Chevrolet New Superior Model is a completely modern, fully equipped car, built to deliver all the real service you can get from any automobile, at the lowest price for which you can get it.
 In every line people pay different prices for the same thing, or what is essentially the same thing.
 You can hear an opera for from $1.00 to $50.00.
 You can buy a square meal at from 50c to $25.00.
 You can take a ride for from 1/2c a mile to $2 00 a mile.
 In this year of common sense, 1922, people are weighing values. They realize how much they have been spending for show, for vanity, and for non-essentials; and now they are making each dollar WORK.
 That is why Chevrolet is first in sales of standard fully equipped cars.

DRINK MORE MILK AND DRINK IT OFTEN
 Milk has the most nutritive qualities of any food that you might take. There are the "vitamines" that you hear so much about these days, there are heat "calories," there are minerals and acids that make a combination that will build up any system to a greater point of efficiency than any one single food might do.
 Again, when there is such milk as ours at your command, why should you or your kiddies be under-nourished? It's much better for the kiddies than candy or any of the other kindred sweets.
 Drink milk, drink more milk and lastly—drink it often.

NOTICE TO SPORTSMEN

DOG OWNERS

The Act of Assn' May 5th, 1921, provides that all dogs must be kept under restraint, and not permitted to roam the woods chasing and destroying game. Mar. 1, closes the legal training season for dogs, all dogs roaming the woods and chasing game since that date is a violation of the law, which provides a penalty of $10. per day for each and every day your dog chases game and additional penalties for each game bird or animal killed by such dogs.

This law is being enforced. Many have already lost valuable dogs and paid penalties for violation of the provisions of this Act. Help us to better game conditions in your territory by seeing to it that all dogs are kept out of the woods, between March 1st and September 1st. This is the season when all game birds or animals breed or nest. Just a few stray dogs will kill more game at this particular time than a great number of sportsmen will kill during the open season.

"Help us," and by so doing improve your own sport. (Signed) W. J. DAVIS, State Game Protector 411 1t ch

LESSON FOR APRIL 2

ASA RELIES ON GOD

LESSON TEXT—11 Chronicles 14:1-12. GOLDEN TEXT—Help us, O Lord our God, for we rest on Thee.—11 Chron. 14:11. REFERENCE MATERIAL.—11 Chron. 14:13-16, Isa. 41:10-13. PRIMARY TOPIC—A King Who Trusted God. JUNIOR TOPIC—God Helping Asa. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A Ruler Who Relied on God. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Source of Personal and National Power.

1. Asa's Reformation (vv. 1-5). Asa was the grandson of Rehoboam. Both his grandfather and father favored idolatry, but in spite of this record of his ancestors, Asa had a will of his own, and though young when he came to the throne, inaugurated a campaign of reform which brought great good. He not only had the handicap of the idolatry and immorality fostered by the two former kings, but he had to contend against the influence of his mother who had encouraged immoral worship (1 Kings 15:13). In order to carry out his reformatory measures he had to wrest authority from her by deposing her. Asa did that which was good and right in the eyes of the Lord (v. 2).

2. Cleared the land of idolatrous emblems and images (vv. 3, 5). (1) Strange altars. These were the altars devoted to other gods. (2) High places. These were places where unlawful sacrifices were offered. (3) Broke down the images. These were upright stones connected with idolatrous worship. (4) Cut down the groves. These were trees or poles connected with tree worship. He had all these relics of idolatry destroyed in Jerusalem and other cities throughout his kingdom.

3. Commanded Judah to seek the Lord (v. 4). He knew that if the reformation was to be effective it must be by the positive seeking after and worshiping of God, accompanied by obedience to His commandments. Devout work avails little unless followed by obedience.

4. Asa's Defensive Preparations (vv. 6-5). 1. Built fortified cities (v. 6). The cities are not named, but the meaning doubtless, is that it was a general system of defense which involved the cities at strategic points.

2. He erected walls about the cities (v. 7). These were usually of stone. Upon the walls were observation towers from which the position and movements of the enemy could be seen, and from which defensive warfare could be waged.

3. Made gates and barred them (v. 7). The reason he assigned for these defensive preparations was that they had sought the Lord God. Those who really trust God will make every effort to provide defense.

4. Had an army of spearmen (v. 8). These spearmen were also protected with large shields. The army was made up of 480,000 brave men. They were prepared to wage an offensive as well as a defensive war.

5. Asa's Victory Over Zerah, the Ethiopian (vv. 9-12).

1. Asa set the battle in array (v. 10). He went out to meet the enemy. He first made a disposition of his means of defense. This was wisdom on his part. Intelligent faith moves the possessor to do first that which is within his power.

2. Asa's prayer (vv. 11, 12). He cried unto the Lord. He sought the source of national power. In this prayer note (1) his conscious helplessness. As he faced the Egyptian army two to one against him, he was clearly conscious of his impotence. The first requisite in obtaining help from God is conscious weakness. The Christian conquers not by self-reliance, but by self-distrust and faith in God. (2) Appeals to God for help. He knew that though they were helpless before the mighty enemy, with God's help they could win the victory. One man with God is a majority. (3) Reposes faith in God. The word "rest" means to lean upon—to cast the entire weight upon. In the measure that we realize our need of support will we lean hard upon God. (4) Advanced courageously. He went forth depending upon God to fight for him. Real faith does not wait until it sees its way clear, but goes forth expecting God to clear the way. (5) Trusting himself upon God's arms. "O Lord, thou art our God." His cause was God's cause. If God has taken us for His people, and if we have taken Him for our God, no enemy can prevail against us. May we experimentally say, "Thou art my God," and hear Him say, "I am thy God."

3. The Egyptians smitten (v. 12). The enemy fled before Israel and could not recover themselves.

Love, Faith and Hope.

A little love from day to day, and strength enough to preach it; a glimpse of heaven along the way. And faith and hope to reach it.

Life as I See It.

REV. JOHN T. BELL

Rev. John T. Bell was the son of a Methodist Preacher, Rev. J. Foster Bell and was born at Woodland July 10, 1876. Two years later the father died leaving this widowed mother with but the one child.

Later in life he entered Lafayette College and completed the course. At this time he married Miss Claudia Kitchen and to this union two girls were born, Emory and Helen.

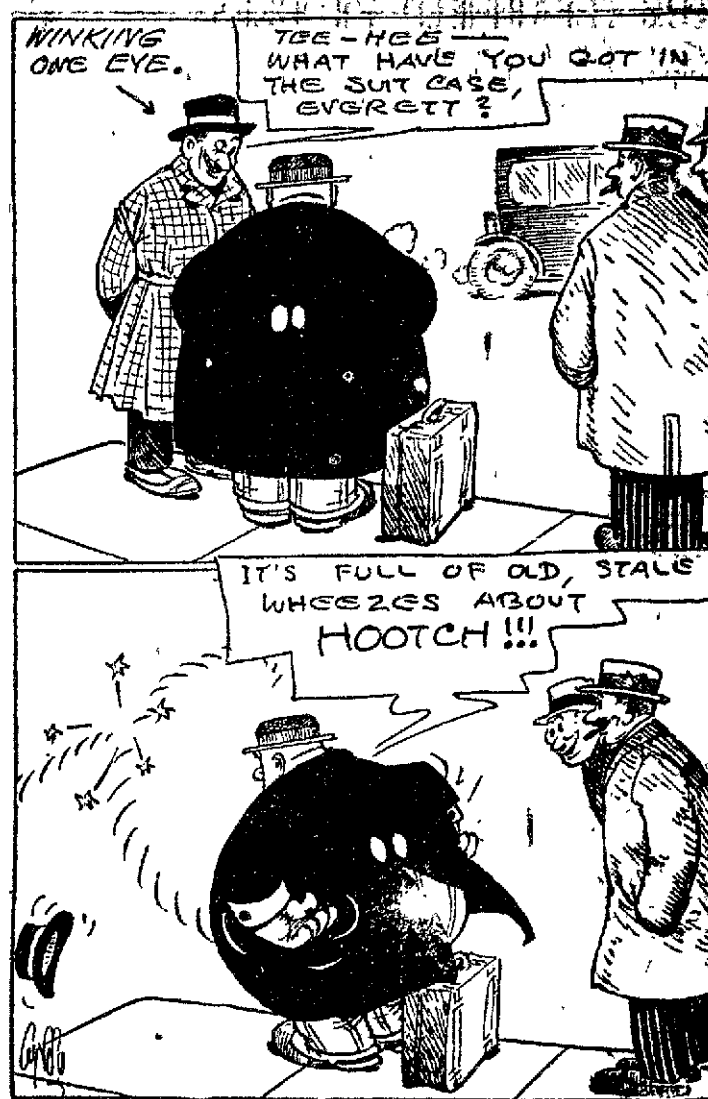

In 1900, with Rev. Armstrong, now pastor of the West Side Church and Rev. B. A. Salter, former pastor of the same church, he entered the ministry of the Central Pennsylvania Conference. He was appointed to Blain 1900-3 and thereafter served the following charges, Belleville and Yeagertown '04-8; Eleventh Street, Clearfield '09-11; Watsonstown '12-16 and Bedford '17-21.

Rev. Bell had never been a robust man, in early life diseased bone of one foot had left him a cripple, and later a neglected empyema of the chest made him a fit subject for tuberculosis. While in Clearfield his health was unusually good, but after moving to Watsonstown, a hemorrhage from the lungs required him to do very little work for a year. He again improved and was removed to Bedford. This was one of his most successful pastorates and during the war he was the most popular speaker in the county for the Liberty Bond drives. Bedford was also on the Lincoln Highway and hundreds of truck trains brought many of the soldiers to that town. He was greatly interested in these young fellows and his enthusiasm led him past his physical capacity. Tuberculosis again became active in his lungs spreading to other parts of his body. Suffering and pain were daily companions. After some months improvement justified his removal to Albuquerque, New Mexico, where he was a patient in the Methodist Deaconess home. This movement proved to be a detriment for the high altitude caused almost daily hemorrhages and he was sent to his mother's home in Milroy in July 1921, later returning to Bedford. Since November he has been very ill and an intense sufferer.

Rev. Bell was a man among men and boys wherever he went. He preached a practical, helpful sermon and lived up to the ideals of his ministry.

EVERETT TRUE

BY CONDO

try. His kindly smile and the simplicity of his message made him beloved by the young people and children, who filled his church Sabbath after Sabbath.

From the time he dedicated himself to God, he never turned back. He possessed a wonderful faith in God which was contagious and throughout his long illness he maintained that faith without wavering. It was a privilege for him to serve others and when sickness prevented his going about he wrote letters of cheer and comfort to those he felt it might help, still striving to live up to a vow that each day he would try to make another's load lighter, comfort the sorrowing and cheer the downhearted. Humility and service to others were the secrets of his ministry. His many friends will feel this loss very kindly.

He is survived by his mother, Mrs. M. E. Bell of Milroy, his wife and two daughters Emory and Helen of Bedford.

A memorial service will be held in the Eleventh Street Church, Sunday Evening at 7:30, conducted by the newly appointed pastor Rev. C. K. Gibson.

REAL closed car comfort starts with a chassis—not merely a body. There must be ample power in the motor, a long solid frame, elastic spring suspension and perfectly balanced construction of every mechanical unit.

That is why the 6-66 closed models are supremely fine motor cars. They are equipped with a mighty engine of 70 horse power and a chassis 131 inch wheel base that represents the last word in six cylinder engineering.

One ride will convince you that the 6-66 is, indeed, the Master of the Highway. It will show you that a fine mechanical foundation is essential in any car—closed or open. And you will be surprised and delighted to learn that the new prices range from $2195 up.

CHAPTER XII

The Helpless Wires

When Bobby Kelso shot his news at us we all made a quick break for the dispatcher's office, the boss in the lead. Durgin, the night dispatcher, had been alone on the train desk, and the only other operators on duty were the car record man and the young fellow who acted as a relief on the commercial wire. When we got there, we found that Tarbell had happened to be in the office when Durgin blew up. He was sitting in at the train key, trying to get Crow Gulch, the one intermediate wire station between the two trains that had failed to get their "meet" orders and this was the first I knew that he really was the expert telegraph operator that his payroll description said he was.

Durgin looked like a tortured ghost. He was a thin, dark man with a sort of scattering beard and limp black hair, one of the clearest-headed dispatchers in the bunch, and the very last man, you'd say, to get rattled in a tangle-up. Yet here he was, hunched in a chair at the car record table in the corner, a staring-eyed, pallid-faced wreck, with the sweat standing in big drops on his forehead and his hands shaking as if he had the palsy.

Morris, the relief man, gave us the particulars, such as they were speaking in a hushed voice as if he was afraid of breaking in on Tarbell's steady rattling of the key in the Crow Gulch station call.

"Number Four"—Four was the east-bound "Flyer"—"is five hours off her time," he explained. "As near as I can get it, Durgin was going to make her 'meet' with Number Five at the blind siding at Sand Creek tank. She ought to have had her orders somewhere west of Bauxite Junction, and Five ought to have got hers at Banta. Durgin says he simply forgot that the 'Flyer' was running late, that she was still out and had a 'meet' to make somewhere with Five."

Brief as Morris' explanation was, it was clear enough for anybody who knew the road and the schedules. The regular meeting-point for the two passenger trains was at a point well east of Portal City, instead of west, and so, of course, would not concern the Desert Division crew of either train, since all crews were changed at Portal City. From Banta to Bauxite Junction, some thirty-odd miles, there was only one telegraph station, namely, that at the Crow Gulch lumber camp, seven miles beyond the Timber Mountain "Y" and the gravel pit where the stolen 1016 had been abandoned.

Unluckily, Crow Gulch was only a day station, the day wires being handled by a young man who was half in the pay of the railroad and half in that of the saw-mill company. This young man slept at the mill camp, which was a mile back in the gulch. There was only one chance in a thousand that he would be down at the railroad station at ten o'clock at night, and it was on that thousandth chance that Tarbell was rattling the Crow Gulch call. If Five were making her card time, she was now about half-way between Timber Mountain "Y" and Crow Gulch. And Four, the "Flyer," had just left Bauxite—with no orders whatever. Which meant that the two trains would come together somewhere near Sand Creek.

Mr. Van Britt was as good a wire man as anybody on the line but it was the boss who took things in hand. "There is a long-distance telephone to the Crow Gulch saw-mill; have you tried that?" he barked at Tarbell.

The big young fellow who looked like a cow-boy—and had really been one, they said—glanced up and nodded. "The call's in," he responded. "Central says she can't raise anybody."

For the next three or four minutes the tension was something fierce. The boss and Mr. Van Britt hung over the train desk, and Tarbell kept up his 'insistent clatter at the key. I had an eye on Durgin. He was still hunched up in the record man's chair, and to all appearances had gone stone-blind crazy. Yet I couldn't get rid of the idea that he was listening—listening as if all of his sealed-up senses had turned in to intensify the one of hearing.

Just about the time when the pence had grown so keen that seemed as if it couldn't be but a second longer, Morris, who was sitting in at the office phone, called out sharply. "Long-distance says she's Crow Gulch lumber camp."

Mr. Van Britt jumped to take the phone, and we got one side of the talk—our side—in shot-like sentences.

"That you Bertram? All right, this is Van Britt, at Portal City. Take one of the mules and ride for your horse down the gulch to the station! Get that? Stop Number Five and make her take siding quick. Report over your own wire what you do. Hurry!"

By the time Mr. Van Britt got back to the train desk, the boss had his pencil out and was figuring on Bertram's time margin. It was now ten-twelve, and Five's time at Crow Gulch was ten-eighteen operator had just six minutes in which to get his mule and cover the rough mile down the gulch.

There was nothing to do but wait, and the waiting was savage. Tarbell had a nerve of iron, but I could see his hand shake as it lay on the glass-topped table. The boss was cool enough outwardly but I knew that in his brain there was a heart-breaking picture of those two fast passenger trains rushing together in the night among the hills with no hint of warning to help them save themselves. Mr. Van Britt couldn't keep still. He had his hands jammed in the side pockets of his coat and was pacing back and forth in the little space between the train desk and the counter railing.

At the different tables in the room the sounders were clicking away as if nothing were happening or due to happen and above the spattering din and chatter you could hear the escape-ment of the big standard time clock on the wall, humming out the seconds that might mean life or death to two or three hundred innocent people.

In horrible suspense the six minutes pulled themselves out to an eternity for that little bunch of us in the dispatchers' office who could do nothing but wait. On the stroke of ten-eighteen, the time when Five was due at Crow Gulch on her schedule, Tarbell turned his relay to catch the first faint tapping from the distant day-station. Another sounder was silent. There was hope in the delay, and Morris voiced it.

"He's there, and he's too busy to talk to us," he suggested, in a hushed voice, and Durbrow, the car record man, added: "That's it; it'd take a minute or two to get them in on the siding."

The second minute passed, and then a third, and yet there was no word from Bertram. "Call him," snapped the boss to Tarbell, but before the ex-cow-boy's hand could reach the key, the sounder began to rattle out a string of dots and dashes, ragged Morse it was, but we could all read it only too plainly.

"Too late—mule threw me and I had to crawl and drag a game leg—"

"I Couldn't Get Rid of the Idea That He Was Listening!"

Five passed full speed at ten-nineteen. "I couldn't make it."

I saw the boss' hands shut up as though the finger nails would cut into the palms.

"That ends it," he said, with a sort of swearing groan in his voice, and then to Tarbell: "You may as well call Kirgan and tell him to order out the wrecking train. Then have Perkins make up a relief train while you're calling the doctors. Van Britt, you go and notify the hospital over your own office wire. Have my private car put into the relief, and see to it that it has all the necessary supplies. And you'd better notify the undertakers, too."

Great Jowls! but it was horrible—for us to be hustling around and making arrangements for the funeral while the people who were to be gathered up and buried were still swinging along live and well, half of them in the crookings among the Timber Mountain foot-hills and the other half somewhere in the desert stretches below Sand Creek!

Tarbell had sent Durbrow to the phone to call Kirgan, and Mr. Van Britt was turning away to go to his own office, when the chair in the corner by the car-record table fell over backwards with a crash and Durgin came staggering across the room. He was staring straight ahead of him as if he had gone blind, and the sweat was running down his face to lose itself in the straggling beard.

When he spoke his voice seemed to come from away off somewhere, and he was still staring at the blank wall beyond the counter-railing.

"Did I—did I hear somebody say you're sending for the undertakers?" he choked with a dry rattle in his throat, and then without waiting for an answer: "While you're at it, you'd better get one for me . . . there's the money to pay him," and he tossed a thick roll of bank bills, wrapped around with a rubber band, over to Tarbell at the train desk.

Naturally, the little grand stand play with the bank roll made a diversion, and that is why the muffled crash of a pistol shot came with a startling shock to everybody. When we turned to look, the mischief was done. Durgin had crumpled down into a misshapen heap on the floor and the sight we saw was enough to make your blood run cold.

You see he had put the muzzle of the pistol into his mouth and—but it is no use. I can't tell about it and the very thought of that thing that had just a minute before been a man lying there on the floor makes me see black and I want to keel over. What he had said about sending for an extra undertaker was right as light. With the top of his head blown off the poor devil didn't need anything more in this world except the burying.

Somewhat his sad mighty truthfully, that even a death in the family doesn't stop the common routine that the things that have to be done will go grinding on just the same whether all of us live or some of us die. Durbrow had jumped from the telephone at the crash of Durgin's shot and for just a second or so we all stood around the dead dispatcher nobody making a move.

Then Mr. Norcross came alive with a jerk, telling Durbrow to get back on his job of calling out the wrecking trains, and the relief train and directing Bobby Kelso to go to another phone and call an undertaker to come and get Durgin's body. Tarbell turned back to the train desk to keep things from getting into a worse tangle than they already were in and to wait for the dreadful news, and the boss stood by him.

This second wait promised to be the worst of all. The collision was due to happen miles from the nearest wire station, the news when we should get it, would probably be carried back to Bauxite Junction by the passenger engine which had come out to try to overtake the "Flyer." But even in that case it might be an agonizing hour or more before we could hear anything.

In a little while Durbrow had clicked in his call to Kirgan, and when the undertaker's wagon came to gather up what was left of the dead dispatcher, the car record man was hurriedly writing off his list of doctors, and Mr. Van Britt had gone down to superintend the making up of the relief train. True to his theory, which among other things had down the broad principle that the public had a right to be given all the facts in a railroad disaster, Mr. Norcross was just telling me to call up the Mountaintop office when Tarbell calmly making true reports upon his train sheet, down his pen and scribbled at his key to "back the chattering sounder."

Mr. Van Britt had come upstairs again, and he and the boss were both standing over Tarbell when the C-S break cleared the wire. Instantly they came a quick call "G-S" "G-S" followed by the signature "T-B" for Bauxite Junction. Tarbell in weaved and then we all heard what Pan had had to say.

Pan's overlook Number Four three miles west of Sand Creek and his brought her back here. What orders for her?

Somewhat he groaned. Oh third God! and Mr. Van Britt dropped into a chair as if he had been hit by a cannon ball. Only the boss kept his head calling out sharply to Durbrow to get off on the doctors' list and to hurry and stop Kirgan from getting away with the wrecking train.

When it was all over and Tarbell had been given charge of the dispatching while a hurry call was sent out for the night relief man, Durbrow came down and into the train desk, there was a little committee meeting in the general manager's office with the boss in the chair, and Mr. Van Britt sitting in for the other member.

"Of course you've drawn your own conclusions. Upon?" the boss began when he had asked me to shut the door.

"I guess so," was the first rejoinder. "I'm afraid it is only too plain that Durgin was hired to do it. What because of the money?"

"I hate it here," said the boss, and he took the blood money bank roll from his pocket and removed the rubber band and "Count it, Durbrow, he ordered passing it to me."

I ran through the bunch. It was in twenties and fifties and there was an even thousand dollars.

There Was an Even Thousand Dollars.

"That is the price of a man's life," said Mr. Van Britt solemnly and then Mr. Norcross said "Who knows anything about Durgin? Was he a married man?"

Mr. Van Britt shook his head. He had been married but he and his wife didn't live together. He had no relatives here. I knew him in the southwest two years ago. He had domestic trouble of some kind and didn't mix at all much with the other men. But he was a good dispatcher and two months ago, when we had an opening here I sent for him.

ODDS AND ENDS AND THINGS

By J. D. C.

There's a hole in the dragnet of Government economy spread around official Washington by Budget Director Dawes and other "watch dogs of the Treasury."

An indication of this came to light when there was delivered to Commander Ralston Holmes, U. S. N., "skipper" of the Presidential yacht Mayflower, a $50,000 speed boat, with mahogany trimmings and rich upholstery.

The rakish craft will occupy a permanent berth on the forward deck of the Mayflower, and will be used by President Harding to carry him ashore when cruising in the Presidential yacht.

Decorated with the Executive seal and the four-starred Presidential ensign, the new speed craft is expected to make a fine showing as a dispatch boat for the President when he starts his summer cruises.

Who wants to be a centenarian? The objective is open to those who seek by Dr. A. Laphorn Smith, an English physician.

He has written a book on "How to Be Useful and Happy from Sixty to Ninety," and in his preface adds the wish that his advice may enable his readers to reach a hundred.

Here are some of his precepts: If you want to keep young keep in with young folks.

Cut down the amount of food, three meals are better than four and two much better than three.

Increase the amount of water. Neither a city nor a citizen can run a drainage system without a water works.

Never exceed one ounce of tobacco a week. Never drink alcohol except at meals or before 6 p. m. and always well diluted with water.

If, when you reach sixty, you have a beard three feet long cut it off gradually.

Do not speculate at sixty. You may lose your sleep as well as your money.

If you have a big business, get some young horses to pull the wagon, but don't get off the wagon.

Cancer, pneumonia and influenza are the principal causes of death between sixty and ninety. They are all three contagious. Do not let your friends give them to you.

People from sixty to ninety should be excused from going to funerals. The funeral of your friends is some times followed by your own.

Dr. Leopold's assertion in his letter published in "The Collyer" Thursday evening relative to Miller Bros. 101 Ranch being the largest in the world moves his neighbor H. P. Dowler, of West Market street, to remark that his dentist-friend was somewhat mistaken.

Mr. Dowler is quite familiar with the southwest and recently returned home from a business trip to that section in which he also visited the 101 Ranch. Mr. Dowler says the largest ranch in the world is located in Texas, alright, but that it is not Miller Bros. ranch, but that of a Mrs. King. It is located in Southern Texas and makes up in area one hundredth part of the State, being 45 miles wide and 90 miles long, or just twice the size of the State of Rhode Island. This mammoth ranch contains 1,700,000 acres and is more than fourteen times the size of the 101 ranch.

Clearfield flappers of tender age, are enjoying moonlight automobile rides to "moonshine parties" these evenings, according to the stories going the rounds where local "Shifters" congregate. These "Shifters" sounds relate at great length how they are able on occasion to slip a little moonshine into the soda or other innocent drinks served their young girl companions. Parents would do well to keep tabs on auto parties these evenings. Tell us who you joy ride with, girls, and we'll tell you what you are.

Susan's Secret.

Susan had been put out to service, and her mistress liked the rosy face of the young girl. One day Susan was sent on an errand to town. She was longer than usual, and her mistress stood in the porch as she came through the field. Susan was happy, and her mistress said: "Why, Susan, what a rosy, happy face you have today! You look as if the dew had kissed you." Susan dropped her eyelids, and murmured: "Indeed, ma'am, but that wasn't his name."

Why "Bootleg" Whisky.

"Bootleg" is a pure Americanism, that grew up among the hills of the mountain country. Bootleg liquor was liquor that was secretly carried in the leg of the moonshiner's boot, because no tax had been paid on it. Usually the man who thus carried it was a native who had distilled it himself, and he became known as a bootlegger and the liquor he carried as bootleg whisky. Nowadays, of course, it is any form of liquor sold in violation of the law.

What Will Your Car Be Worth After It Has Run Fifty Thousand Miles?

A definite way to judge value and compute cost of upkeep and operation. Learn how economical it is to own a Marmon—The Foremost Fine Car

When you buy a motor car think of the day when you will want to sell it. What will it be worth, for instance, after it has run 50,000 miles? It will be a used car value, minus what it costs to put it in first-class condition.

If renewing is high, your car's value is less. If renewal is low, your car's value is increased. It is a simple matter of arithmetic.

Figure by the year or by mileage, as you choose. The result is the same. You are really buying transportation. Shall it be good or bad, efficient or disappointing?

The way to judge efficiency is to choose the car that spends the least time in the shop. And that means the one which, due to inherent design and finer materials, can be renewed better, quicker and at lower cost.

That requirement is best met by the Marmon, which has established its position as The Foremost Fine Car, the most dependable, the most economical, the least depreciating of all comparable cars. This is based on records kept of thousands of 1920, 1921 and 1922 Marmons throughout the country—some with mileages of 55,000 and up.

Every fact about the Marmon is at your disposal. We can prove every statement made. We have no opportunity.

Whaleskin Valuable.
Whiteskin is so thick that it can be split into several layers, each as stout as ox hide, and it is excellent for making boots, bags, harness, or belting. The usefulness of the whale in this respect is not confined to his outer skin. The stomach furnishes a leather as soft and as strong as the best kid. Another important thing about the whale is that the whole of his skin is good. The skins of cows, horses and other land animals furnish a comparatively small quantity of leather, for only certain portions of the hide are of the right quality.

Tabacco Legends.
According to one fantastic legend Adam got so bored with Eve that he asked God to send him a consolation, and God sent tobacco. The other story relates that our First Mother got so "fed up" with her husband's attentions that she prayed God to send him some other distraction, and the heavenly gift of tobacco answered her prayer.—Montreal Family Herald

Glen Richey, March 30, 1922

EDITOR PROGRESS:

Dear Sir:—Please give us space in your paper for a little tale about Morgan—not Morgan, the old time freebooter, who used to shake down the "Spiggoty's" down around South America, but our own Bob Morgan, who was hailed into Justice Kialzer's Curwensville Court by a grouchy old Pike Township farmer because some fellow drove his automobile over one corner of one of his penny-royal fields, where it would hurry one to raise even an umbrella, although the old fellow has raised lots of L with his neighbors about this field.

The other day the genial Bob was driving to Clearfield via of Hogback. He found the roads simply awful and when he neared the Porter place, saw where some fellow ahead of him had skirted the road and edged along one of Porter's fields for possibly one hundred yards before he got back on to the road. Bob says he heard that old man Porter was rather crusty and decided that as he weighed but eight stone in battle trim and had one flat wheel he'd better stick to the road, mud or no mud. He did so, but soon found himself up against it for far with the axles of his car dragging the mud, and unable to proceed. Borrowing a shovel from Mr. Porter and with the assistance of a couple of friends, Bob's knowledge of mining allowed him to get the car out after one hour and a half's labor. During the gyrations or evolution from the mire to the solid ground one wheel touched Porter's sacred soil.

During the time Bob was floundering in the depths of Pike Township, a car belonging to Harry Ogden, a neighbor of Mr. Porter's came along, driven by Ogden's son, and he was forced to enroach upon the field for a few feet in getting by. All difficulties and some time and Bob was finally able to get under way.

But his difficulties were far from ended. The next day he was summoned to appear before Squire Kratzer to answer for trespassing on Porter's hellraising acres. Porter had two offenses chalked up against Bob and none against Ogden and insisted on the Justice soaking Bob $17.50 to be used for "edification" and general advancement of Pike Township school children.

Now a Scotchman don't care a hit more for a dollar than a farmer does for one of his eyes and Bob naturally objected to parting with seventeen of them in a flock and he put up strenuous objection to the operation or attempted operation on his bankroll. The upshot of the matter was that because Porter was unable to prove where Robert had violated the sanctity of his broad acres as he stated Bob finally succeeded in getting off with a loss of $2.50 in cash and yards and yards of his temper. The prosecutor had more respect for Big Harry, his neighbor but he was determined that Little Bob should pay.

We Glen Richey fellows would like to have this appear in your paper as a warning to Lawrence Township motorists to keep off the grass while traveling through Pike Township and will appreciate its appearing.

Yours truly,
GLEN RICHEY MUDLARKS

Not at all a "Bad Idea."
Just as tugboats and American Legion posts and suburban streets are named in memory of persons who have been associated with them, so wedding gifts are designated by the name of the giver. When the bride calls to hubby from the kitchen for the "company" silver, she asks for "Aunt Bertha's" soup ladle or "Jack's" tea strainer, or "Mother Jones'" teacup set. And hubby may inquire impatiently for the hand-worked towels "that Auntie sent us." Of course, the system may also be used to flatter some old flame who happens to be calling.

The Quarter at Church.
An instance of momentary success in the collection has been noted, when the minister published the following goliath in the congregational calendar: "I am 25 cents. I'm too small to buy a quart of oil; I'm too small to buy one-half pound of candy; I'm too small to buy a ticket to a good movie show; I'm even too small to buy a box of undetectable rouge; but most people think I'm 'some money' when I come to church."—The Christian Register.

Smallest Visible Things.
Few persons would guess that the smallest things visible to the eye are the stars. Yet stars were no doubt correct in declaring that such is the case. Great as many of the stars are in actual magnitude, their distance is so immense that their angular diameter becomes insensible and they approach the condition of geometrical points. The minute disks that they appear to have are spurious, an effect of irradiation.

Problem in Criticism.
Criticism presents to the creator a problem which is never solved. Criticism is, to the artist, a perpetual presence; or perhaps a ghost which he will not succeed in laying. If he could satisfy his mind that criticism was a certain thing, a good thing or a bad, a proper presence or an irrelevant, he might psychologically dispose of it. But he cannot.—Waldo Frank.

Criticism presents to the creator a problem which is never solved.

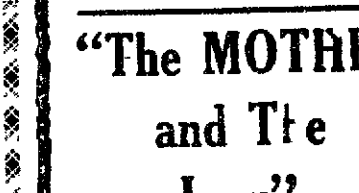

Criticism is, to the artist, a perpetual presence; or perhaps a ghost which he will not succeed in laying.

If he could satisfy his mind that criticism was a certain thing, a good thing or a bad, a proper presence or an irrelevant, he might psychologically dispose of it.

But he cannot.—Waldo Frank.

The Quarter at Church.
An instance of momentary success in the collection has been noted, when the minister published the following goliath in the congregational calendar: "I am 25 cents. I'm too small to buy a quart of oil; I'm too small to buy one-half pound of candy; I'm too small to buy a ticket to a good movie show; I'm even too small to buy a box of undetectable rouge; but most people think I'm 'some money' when I come to church."—The Christian Register.

Smallest Visible Things.
Few persons would guess that the smallest things visible to the eye are the stars. Yet stars were no doubt correct in declaring that such is the case. Great as many of the stars are in actual magnitude, their distance is so immense that their angular diameter becomes insensible and they approach the condition of geometrical points. The minute disks that they appear to have are spurious, an effect of irradiation.

Pa in a Bad Way.

"Dear Mary," wrote a woman to her absent daughter, "I am sorry to cut your vacation short, but you'll have to come home right off. Your pa fell off a load of hay this morning and is feeling terrible. The doctor has just been here and went. He says it will take some time before your pa will be up, because the fall has separated his diaphragm from his liver. I want you should catch the 6:45 in the morning, Ma."

"Corporations Have No Souls."

This legal maxim was first laid down by Sir Edward Coke in the case of Sutton's hospital. "They (corporations) cannot commit treason nor be outlawed nor excommunicated, for they have no souls." Lord Thurlow subsequently paraphrased this maxim in his own rough way: "You never expected justice from a corporation, did you? They have neither a soul to lose nor a body to kick."

Comfort a Necessary Element.

For real comfort have a small stand at the side of your bed on which you keep a collection of books and magazines. This, with a well arranged light will give you an hour's comfortable reading many a night. Be a little careful in the choice of this stand; you will find that a stand with at least one shelf and a small drawer is very convenient.

Is It Progress?

"It may be progress or it may be another form of motion," said Old Man Dooodle, "but it is apparent that nowadays the loss of a reputation for probity and virtue is not so much of a handicap as it was a few years ago. In fact, I have heard some handclapping on the technical acquittal of self-confessed notorious crooks."—Chicago Daily News.

WILLIAM DOTS, SR., PASSES AWAY

Clearfield county has lost one of the oldest, best known and most highly esteemed citizens in the death of the venerable William Dotts, Sr., whose illness was recently referred to in our columns, and who passed away at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Orrie Radebach, wife of Prof. J. E. Radebach, supervising principal of the Osceola schools, at Fairview, near Osceola Mills, on Wednesday, March 29th, 1922.

The deceased was born near Philadelphia on August 24th, 1830, making his age 91 years, 7 months and 5 days. He was one of fourteen children, all of whom preceded him to the spirit world and three of whom lived to be over 90 years of age.

Mr. Dotts came to Clearfield county in 1862, locating at Glen Hope, where he resided for many years and followed cabinet making and carpentering. He was united in marriage to Miss Catherine Keagy on February 9, 1865. To this union four children were born. The only one surviving is his daughter, Mrs. J. E. Radebach, with whom he has for some time been making his home and from whom he received his last tender ministrations during the illness that finally resulted in his demise.

Mr. Dotts was a member of the Presbyterian church, and passed away in the triumph of the Christian faith. He was a good man, and many in the last day will be able to rise up and call him blessed for kindnesses shown them in his long and useful life.

He was also a charter member of the Glen Hope Lodge, No. 669, I. O. O. F., organized 53 years ago. The funeral will be held this afternoon, with interment at Glen Hope.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable

Union Village, Vt.—"I was weak and nervous and all round. I could not walk across the floor without resting and I had been that way for weeks. Before I finished I was able to work nine hours a day in a steam laundry. I cannot say too much in favor of your medicine. I trust all sick and suffering women will take it. It has been two years since I took it and I am strong and well."

—Mrs. L. A. GUIMANN, Union Village, Vermont.

Prehistoric Freight.

When the cargo of a ship was unloaded recently at Portland, Ore., it was discovered that a certain portion, which was supposed to consist of walrus tusks, proved to be the ivory tusks of the mastodon. Crafty Siberian natives had substituted these for the walrus ivory which was ordered. The cheaters, however, cheated themselves, for in spite of its great age the substitute was well preserved and the large size of the tusks consequently made them more valuable.
